Heaviest Gunfire Blasts Raiders Penetrating Fogs to Bomb London

Firemen Killed On Building Tops; Weather Thickens Over Metropolis

The War Today

BATTERED LONDON fights off a six-hour raid by fog-hidden Nazi night raiders, only to hear them return a few minutes later to continue for another 95 minutes their tenth night of assault.

BRITONS WELCOME as an ally the autumn's first choppy weather in the Channel, but declare Hitler's attack still may come "at any hour" despite repeated R. A. F. bombing of Germany's Channel bases; London denies attempted German landings have already been repulsed.

GERMANS CLAIM Reichsmarshal Goering has flown over London, welcome Spain's interior minister, Franco's brother-in-law, for talks which Britain fears may bring assault on Gibraltar.

DESERT FIGHTING on the hot sands of western Egypt continues, with the Italians pushing forward under heavy assault by British planes and mechanized forces.

Fog Comes as Friend

By Edwin Stout.

London (Tuesday), Sept. 17. Bombs hurled on central London by German warplanes early today killed a number of firemen who were atop high ladders battling a great blaze set by earlier raiders. Other bomb-set fires flared in a fashionable residential quarter.

The pre-dawn raiders came back in thickening weather which had forced abandonment of their previous attack.

Within a few minutes heavy bomb explosions were heard in the center of London and the antiaircraft guns barked out their challenge.

Tenth Night of Siege

The fog on which Britons long have counted as an autumn ally had provided only a recess of less than two hours.

But after one hour and 35 minutes the Germans called it quits and the all-clear came at 5:24 a. m., rounding out the tenth night of air siege against the British capital.

During the night, from 8:09 p. m. until shortly after 2 a. m., the Germans came over in a steady bomb-bearing procession, bringing out the heaviest antiaircraft fire yet heard in the London area.

The weather steadily grew worse, and at 2:41 a. m. the all-clear sounded, but about the time Londoners had crawled wearily into bed, the new alarm came.

During the same period the Germans struck extensively in the midlands, the northeast and elsewhere in England.

Struggle "Approaching"

The British, meanwhile, were cheered by revised air ministry figures on Sunday's intensive daylight raids which boosted the toll of German planes to 185, record for a single day's fighting. The ministry said 130 of these were bombers. British losses were put at only 25, five less than originally estimated. Twelve of the pilots were saved.

[Prime Minister Churchill, the N. Y. Herald-Tribune reported, summed up the feeling of his countrymen in a message of felicitations to the fighter command of the R. A. F. Their results, his message said, "exceed all expectations and give a just and sober confidence in the approaching struggle." The key word

Diplomats Dissent

British Expect Nazi Invasion 'Any Hour;' Await It Calmly

Cabinet Confident Island Can Repel Attempt to Enter It With Land Force; R. A. F. Blasts Tempelhof, Antwerp Docks

By Edward W. Beattie, Jr.,
United Press Staff Writer

London, Sept. 16.—Britain's war cabinet believes that a German invasion "may come at any hour," it was stated tonight by an influential member of the government.

The cabinet, he said, still is "reckoning strongly" with Adolf Hitler's threats of immediate attack, "but we have never been more confident of our ability to crush it."

The havoc wrought by the R. A. F. in the last 48 hours, especially against the "jumping off points" of Germany's invasion preparations across the Channel, may have "seriously cramped" Hitler's plans, the government leader said.

The British cabinet's reported fears were in contrast with the reports of foreign diplomats to their governments. Although none of them ruled out such a possibility, most of them held that the odds were all against any Nazi attempt to land on British soil at this time.

Still, it was said, the danger will be acute for another week or ten days.

[Persistent reports that an attempted German landing on the English coast had already been attempted—and repulsed—were emphatically denied in London for the second time in four days, the Associated Press said. The reports, first heard in the United States from Dr. Charles F. Bove, former Paris surgeon, on his arrival at Jersey City last Friday, were repeated Monday by "British informants" arriving by plane at Lisbon.

[The Lisbon version was that the German attack, apparently a "feeler" raid, had been hurled back by British coastal guns and small patrol craft which "played havoc with the German barges, and not one of the Germans reached land alive."

[Dr. Bove referred to German bodies floating in the harbor at Cherbourg; the Lisbon informants mentioned bodies washed up on English shores. The New York Herald Tribune, however, pointed out that the reported "floating bodies" may have resulted from the intensive British bombing of barge concentrations in French ports. These barges may have been loaded with troops, it was said.]

Meanwhile, the Channel's recent

Goering Flight Seen Auguring 'Big Events'

Views London From Bomber; Berlin's Silence 'Significant'

By C. Brooks Peters

Berlin, Sept. 16.—The same sort of stony silence which has shrouded official quarters here when important events have been impending in the past, hung over military news sources in the Reich's capital tonight.

The only information available in Berlin relative to the day's aerial activities over the British Isles was that "units of the German air force took off in the evening hours for attacks on England."

It may be significant that authoritative quarters repeat Hermann Goering, the nationally popular 47-year-old Reichsmarshal and heir-designate to Chancellor Hitler's position of leader of the Third Reich, last night personally piloted a bomber over the British capital.

For Goering is directing the activities of his air force against the British from his headquarters in a small village in Normandy, and evidently wished to inspect the results of the intensive bombing raids of recent days.

Field Marshal von Brauchitsch, it will be recalled, was reported to have visited and inspected German troop formations in North France last week.

The Reichsmarshal piloted a Junkers 88, one of Germany's newest

British Employ 'Come-Hither' Tactics in Egypt

Strategy Designed To Expose Italian Flanks to Attacks

With British Army in Western Egyptian Desert, Sept. 16.—Desert warfare of the modern mechanized sort—in which camels are absent—is in full swing today as Premier Mussolini's colonial legions, both white and black, move cautiously westward from Libya along the Mediterranean coastal region in the long-expected Fascist invasion of Egypt.

Preceded by tanks and armored cars, the Italian mobile column closest to the sea has reached a point in a line with the seaside waterhole called Buqbuq, 28 miles east of the Libyan frontier.

The Fascist advance is accompanied by intensive aerial activity by both sides, with dive-bombers making their first appearance above the desert wastes, a development of outstanding significance. Behind the front here I have heard repeatedly in the distance the boom of exploding bombs and the lesser crackle of antiaircraft fire.

Curiously enough the Italian operations of the last four days have followed roughly the schedule contained in confidential plans captured by the British from the first Libyan division many weeks ago.

The British program involves, first, a "come-hither" defense cal-

Woman Pistol Expert Shoots Husband, Blames Jealousy

While Oscar Rush, 42, lay near death from a bullet wound through the heart yesterday a 25-year-old housewife calmly admitted in a four-hour questioning by police that she shot him in a jealous rage because she suspected him of having affairs with other women.

Rush, an automobile salesman who is a distant cousin of Representative Frank W. Boykin (Democrat), of Alabama, was shot shortly before 7:30 yesterday morning as he sat in a company car on the lot of Mandell Chevrolet Co., 1234 Good Hope road southeast. Two women, wives of fellow salesmen of the company, were chatting in the back seat of the car as the woman, who gave her name as Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Sibley Rush, shot a .22 calibre pistol at Rush without uttering a word.

Mrs. Rush, who later told police she was an expert markswoman, gave herself up shortly afterward to Traffic Policeman George Waite.

Rush was taken to Gallinger Hospital where an emergency operation was performed.

"I shot him because I was jealous of his attentions to other women," Mrs. Rush told Capt. Hugh H. Groves at No. 11 Precinct Station.

Details of the events that led up to the shooting were pieced together by police after Mrs. Rush was said to have altered her story several times. She first told Capt. Groves she and her husband had been out on a drinking party Sunday night and later told Lieut. George Darnell, chief of the Homicide Squad, that she had not seen him until she called for him at his rooming house, 1006 North Carolina avenue southeast, about 2 a. m. Mrs. Rush had been living with her parents in Takoma Park, Md. The landlady at Rush's rooming house told police that Mrs. Rush ran through the house hurling accusations at her husband and threatening to shoot him.

Willkie Sees Dictatorship Peril in U. S.

Roosevelt Has Lost Confidence In Democracy, Candidate Charges

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

Coffeyville, Kans., Sept. 16.—Wendell L. Willkie told a wildly cheering crowd of many thousands here today that the battle of America would have to be placed ahead of the battle of Britain.

Democracy over here, he said, is no less endangered than it is by the flames in London.

He said that President Roosevelt had lost confidence in democracy, and in his hands "our traditions are not safe."

"I charge that here in America he has strained our democratic institutions to the breaking point," Willkie said. "I warn you—and I say this in dead earnest: If, because of some speeches about humanity, you return this Administration to office, you will be serving under an American totalitarian government before the long third term is over."

Makes Campaign History

Estimates of the number who heard the speech ranged from 35,000 up to the 67,000 figure of Will Zurbucken, assistant director of the Kansas State highway patrol who estimated 18,000 more saw Willkie in the procession through town.

The Republican nominee's speech was regarded as one of the most furious attacks in the history of American Presidential campaigns. He charged that President Roosevelt, by attacking American business and keeping the economic system in turmoil, had "made our depression permanent."

He charged that the President by "meddling" in international politics had "encouraged the European conflagration."

The rugged Hoosier candidate—in good voice and rare fighting form—called today's onslaught the "opening" speech of his campaign, and he chose as the place for its delivery this Kansas town where in 1913-14 he was "Prof. Willkie," a teacher of American history.

Introduced By Johnson

Coffeyville's population of 17,000 had grown for the day to more than twice that. It was the greatest day Coffeyville had known since the Dalton boys shot up the town and were shot down in turn.

Its two greatest heroes were on hand—the erstwhile Prof. Willkie, now aiming at the highest office in the land, and Walter Johnson, the "Big Train" of baseball, who once pitched for the Coffeyville nine.

Johnson, a Republican candidate for one of Maryland's seats in the House, introduced Willkie. The G. O. P. leader said he hoped to see the fireball king in the House when he himself moved into the White House.

Johnson had said:

"I am proud of my old home town and even more proud to be present today and introduce the next President of the United States."

Willkie replied:

"You were my boyhood hero,

Willkie Taken To Task by Hull For 'Ignorance'

Denies Roosevelt Telephoned Either Hitler or Mussolini

Secretary Hull declared yesterday that Wendell Willkie's recent remarks about President Roosevelt and the Munich conference showed the Republican nominee was "grossly ignorant of the history of the last few years."

Willkie had said at Joliet, Ill., Saturday that Mr. Roosevelt had "telephoned Hitler and Mussolini and urged them to sell Czecho-Slovakia down the river at Munich." Later his press secretary, Lem Jones, said that Willkie had "misspoken" and that he intended to say that the President had urged a settlement at Munich and that the pact reached there "agreed to sell Czecho-Slovakia down the river."

"The President has never communicated by telephone with either Premier Mussolini or Chancellor Hitler," Hull replied in a statement. "All the President has ever urged upon the nations involved has been in accordance with the provisions of the Kellogg Pact, which provides

Fight Brews For House Leadership

4 Men in Contest To Succeed Rayburn, Elected Speaker

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

A spirited four-man contest for majority leader of the House developed last night after Representative Rayburn, of Texas, became the Roosevelt Administration's fourth Speaker.

Rayburn, 58-year-old bachelor, stalwart party warrior for New Deal measures, yet a protege of John Garner, was elected Speaker by acclamation as the body of William B. Bankhead, of Alabama, lay in state at the foot of the rostrum.

Before a saddened funeral party left for Jasper, Ala., the race for the majority leadership post vacated by Rayburn had reached such momentum that proposals were advanced to postpone the choice to head off a party fight.

No Announced Candidates

There were no announced candidates, but friends were busily canvassing the strength of four men—Representative John W. McCormack, of Massachusetts, chairman of the House Democratic caucus; Representative Patrick J. Boland, of Pennsylvania, House majority whip; Representative Jere Cooper, of Tennessee, chairman of the Ways and Means Tax subcommittee, and Representative Clifton A. Conscription Act Signed, 16,500,000 Must Appear; 35,700 More Guardsmen Called Out for Service

The Draft as a Public Servitor

THE NEW DRAFT LAW, like that of 1917, says Mark Sullivan, insures that the soldier shall serve the civilian—not that civilians shall bow to the military—thus maintaining the subordination of the Army to the body politic. See page 8.

'Time Is at a Premium'

Gen. George C. Marshall, Army Chief of Staff, declared last night that the prospect of military danger to the United States "trembles on the verge of becoming a probability."

He made the statement in a radio address announcing that 35,700 additional National Guardsmen are being ordered to a year's active duty October 15. Three additional guard divisions, three Air Corps squadrons and the entire Hawaiian and Puerto Rican National Guard will report for duty on that date.

Sixty-thousand other Guardsmen from 26 States reported for a year's service yesterday at armories throughout the country, and Marshall's talk was by way of a welcoming address to this latest addition to the Army.

Sees Critical Period Ahead

Referring to the calling of these men and the enactment of the conscription act, Gen. Marshall said:

"I wish to emphasize the importance of these preparations. We are at peace with every nation in the world. Nevertheless it is the feeling of the War Department that the next six months include the possibility of being the most critical period in the history of this Nation. Ordinary common sense indicates that our preparations should be made accordingly.

"The situation today is utterly different from that of 1917. Then we were at war—but we foresaw small possibility of military danger to this country. Today such a possibility trembles on the verge of becoming a probability.

"Then we could proceed with deliberation. We could wait until we built cantonments, until we first trained officers later to train the men, until we were prepared to form a field Army. We did not need to worry about arms, equipment and ammunition—our Allies were prepared to supply these necessities.

No Allies This Time

"Today time is at a premium and modern arms and equipment must be provided by our own industries—not by allies. We must be prepared to stand alone . . . The mobilization this morning of the first increment of the National Guard is the first long step in the preparation of an adequate Army of citizen-soldiers to man our defenses."

The units yesterday ordered to report on October 15 included the Twenty-seventh Division of New

The Law of the Land

By John G. Norris

President Roosevelt yesterday signed the Draft Act, making compulsory peace-time military service the law of the land, and immediately proclaimed October 16 as registration day for all American men, 21 to 35, inclusive.

About 16,500,000 men thereby become liable for a year's military service anywhere in the Western Hemisphere or American possessions. Approximately 5,000,000 are expected to be available after all deferments are made from which 400,000 will be called this fall and winter. The Army now plans to call another 400,000 in April and about 800,000 a year until 1945.

Calls on Citizens

Calling on State Governors and the District Commissioners to provide suitable places for registration, local election officials and "other patriotic citizens" to aid in the work, and employers to give their employes "sufficient time off" to appear and fill out the forms, the President declared:

"We must and will marshal our great potential strength to fend off war from our shores. We must and will prevent our land from becoming a victim of aggression."

During the day, the War Department also announced the award of contracts totaling $196,158,127 for war materials, including orders placed with five aircraft companies for what is understood to include nearly 3,000 airplanes of various types.

The President signed the historic conscription act at 3:08 p. m. in the Cabinet Room of the White House executive offices. Present, as camera bulbs flashed, were Secretary of War Stimson, Gen. George C. Marshall, Army chief of staff, and the chairmen of the Senate and House Military Affairs Committees, Senator Sheppard, of Texas and Representative May, of Kentucky.

Sets Oct. 16

Under the proclamation issued a few seconds later all men, 21 through 35, citizens and aliens alike, must present themselves between 7 a. m. and 9 p. m. Wednesday, October 16, at places to be designated, and register. The law provides that all men who have reached their twenty-first and have not reached their thirty-sixth birthday by that day must appear and fill out the required forms.

Under plans already prepared, men in the District of Columbia will register at schools, while throughout the States the regular polling places will be used.

A national lottery will be held a few days after registration to determine the order men will be subject to service and questionnaires will be mailed to those near the top of the lists. Local civilian boards will classify these, deferring men holding essential jobs, those with dependents and those specifically exempt by terms of the act.

The number of men needed will be prorated among the States and in turn prorated to local precincts. Each locality will then be required to furnish the number of men to

Under Cover of Darkness

Removal of Japanese Cherry Trees Begins in Tidal Basin

By the light of the moon, workmen last night began uprooting Japanese cherry trees which line the southern bank of the Tidal Basin.

At the scene, where the trees were being pulled up by tractors and loaded on trucks, The Post was told the work was undertaken under cover of darkness to prevent a recurrence of the blast of protests that shook the Capital when the removal plans were disclosed.

But Francis F. Gillen, acting superintendent of National Capital Parks, denied any such motive when reached at his home. The construction company, he said, was behind schedule in starting work on changing the Tidal Basin's southern shoreline and had asked park officials' permission to work at night.

Gillen said the trees would be replaced, when the memorial's grounds are landscaped, from nurseries of the park service and the American Nursery Association.

Halifax Isolated as Hurricane Pounds 3 Canadian Provinces

By the United Press

Montreal (Tuesday), Sept. 17.—A hurricane with an estimated wind velocity of 70 miles an hour struck portions of Canada's Maritime provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island last night and much of the stricken territory, including the vital port of Halifax, was cut off from the outside world early today.

The storm moved up the Atlantic from tropical waters and swerved out to sea after appearing on Sunday to be headed for New England.

(Reports from eastern Maine said that the edge of the storm put power lines out of commission in some districts there, but that no other damage was reported.)

Halifax, teeming with wartime shipping, was cut off from all communication with the outside except that furnished through the government short wave radio.

Wartime conditions, along with the disrupted communications, almost blocked efforts to discover what damage had been inflicted there.

Saint John, New Brunswick, reported considerable damage. There were some casualties there.

Saint John was without power. The wind tore up large trees, hurling them against houses and automobiles. Traffic was at a standstill.

The short wave station in Ottawa reported the Naval station at Halifax was "undamaged" but there was no other information. Asked about possible damage to shipping and to the city an official said he could not "give out anything like that."

The government short-wave station is the only such in operation, amateur short-wavers being forbidden to use their sets during wartime.

All attempts to reach Halifax by regular communication lines failed.

It was speculated that Prince Edward Island, north of Nova Scotia, might be spared the full force of the blow, which was headed in the direction of the island at latest reports.

Draft Registration Set for Oct. 16

President Signs Bill; 16,500,000 Must Appear

make up its quota from among men not deferred.

In a statement, issued simultaneously with his proclamation fixing the registration day, President Roosevelt explained the draft procedure and declared that all men 18 to 35 will be afforded an opportunity to volunteer for a year's military service. They will be taken before any draftees are inducted into the Army and will count against the communities' conscription quota.

The President touched on another point emphasized during weeks of heated debate on the conscription bill—the present lack of modern weapons for men to be called.

"In the military service," he said, "they will be intelligently led, comfortably clothed, well fed, and adequately armed and equipped for basic training. By the time they get physically hardened, mentally disciplined and properly trained in fundamentals, the flow of critical munitions from factory to combat units will meeet the full requirements for their advanced training."

Mr. Roosevelt in his proclamation took note of the international situation as making conscription necessary.

"At Cross Roads of Destiny"

"America stands at the cross roads of its destiny," he declared. "Time and distance have been shortened. A few weeks have seen great nations fall. We cannot remain indifferent to the philosophy of force now rampant in the world. The terrible fate of nations whose weakness invited attack is too well known to us all."

The training to be given, Mr. Roosevelt said, will benefit the Nation.

"In the military service, Americans from all walks of life, rich and poor, country-bred and city raised, farmer, student manual laborer and white-collar worker, will learn to live side by side, to depend upon each other in military drills and maneuvers, and to appreciate each other's dignity as American citizens," he stated.

The Presiden's proclamation declared that each man subject to registration is required to familiarize himself with the rules and regulations regarding registration and to comply with them. He is expected to issue an executive order later in the week putting regulations drafted by the Army and Navy Selective Service Committee into effect.

Officials said yesterday that one of these, which for the time being would "presume" all married men to have dependents without regard to whether his wife in fact relied on him for support, may have to be revised. The Army desires such a rule to avoid complications as to dependency, but the final language of the draft set may bar this and require that dependency in fact be proved.

Special Days Planned

Under the proclamation, men who are outside continental United States on October 16 must register within five days after their return. Special registration days will be set later for Hawaii, Alaska and Puerto Rico, it was said, and special procedure will be set up for persons who on account of sickness or other causes beyond their control are unable to present themselves for registration.

Men on trips may register wherever they are, and their cards will be sent to the boards in their home community. There will be no national holiday for registration as earlier had been suggested.

The President used two pens to sign the bill, presenting them to Senator Sheppard and Congressman May.

Earlier in the day, the White House announced that about 36,000 of the first 400,000 draftees would be Negroes, ratio to the proportion of members of the race to the total population. Several new Colored units have been created recently and the establishment of more is under consideration, it was said. Existing units will be raised to full war strength with the draftees.

Stephen Early, White House secretary, also announced that the President had initiated an effort to establish weekly radio reports on the progress of national defense by a panel of well-known news commentators. Wythe Williams, editor and radio commentator, has been asked by the President to organize this, Early said.

Bombers Ordered

Yesterday's aircraft awards totaled $116,842,227. The Glenn L. Martin Co., of Baltimore, received a $14,269,646 order for bombers and spare parts, while a $59,762,850 order for bombers and spare parts went to the Boeing Aircraft Co. The Stearman Aircraft division of Boeing, at Wichita, received a $6,934,096 contract for training planes.

Lockheed Aircraft Corporation, of Burbank, Calif., was awarded a $15,646,450 order for pursuit planes, and the Douglas Airplane Co., of Santa Monica, Calif., one of $20,229,184 for transport planes. The number of planes bought was not made public, but it was announced that all but 95 of the 4,247 voted earlier this year are now ordered, while contracts have been awarded for 2,681 of the 14,394 planes for which funds were voted last week.

It was estimated unofficially that the Boeing order included about 240 four-engined bombers and that about 200 pursuit planes were in the Lockheed contract.

Cox to Set Up Draft Offices In D.C. Armory

Guard Commander Says Headquarters May Be Ready Tomorrow

Central offices for administering the draft in Washington will be set up in the District National Guard armory, Sixth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest, "probably Wednesday morning," Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, local selective service executive, said yesterday.

Gen. Cox, commander of the District Guard, said officers of his staff who will assist him in administering the law here will be called up on extended active duty for the purpose. These officers had not been definitely selected last night.

This morning, Cox said, he will confer with the District Commissioners on personnel of local draft boards, on which more than 500 citizens already have volunteered to serve. He will recommend board members to the Commissioners who, in turn, will make recommendations to President Roosevelt.

Mrs. Roosevelt Rapped for Attack On Youth Congress

New York, Sept. 16 (AP).—Joseph Cadden, executive secretary of the American Youth Congress, said today he was "sorry to see Mrs. Roosevelt use angry invective instead of reasoned argument" in discussing the congress' anticonscription views.

"Her attempt to wave aside our opposition to conscription by calling it 'claptrap' is just as childish as the President's attempt last February to wave aside the problem of 4,000,000 unemployed youth by saying 'Twaddle'," Cadden added.

Mrs. Roosevelt had written that "to make sweeping statements seems to me stupid beyond yords, and to use such claptrap as the young people in the American Youth Congress use seems to me even more stupid."

Hull asserted that Mr. Roosevelt, in September, 1938, had "specifically urged in messages made public immediately that a peaceful solution be found through negotiations in which all the nations involved would be represented, including Czecho-Slovakia, and that such negotiations be undertaken by all nations on an equal basis, with none of them under the threat of aggression."

It was the second time that the Secretary of State had sprung to the defense of the Administration against Republican campaign attacks. Last month he replied to criticism of the reciprocal trade agreements voiced by Senator Charles L. 1st Lady Buys All-American Fall Wardrobe

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, Sept. 16.—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt bought her autumn wardrobe this afternoon at Arnold Constable's.

The outfit included six costumes, of which four were black, one wine-colored and the other a dull slate blue.

When told that all were of American design, thereby intensifying the movement to make New York the style center of the world, the President's wife said she was "always very proud to wear American designs."

The campaign outfit included a hat which Mrs. Roosevelt had requested as suitable for riding in open cars with the President.

The 1940 campaign hat is a tight fitting, off-the-face turban of black ratine felt with a jeweled ornament in front. Mrs. Roosevelt's second hat is a large black caballero Breton with no trimming save a pearl clip at the rear, where a bandeau fits close to the head.

The afternoon street suit which will be the chief campaign costume is of black wool and satin—a wool skirt, topped with a high-necked blouse. It is worn with a short black cloth jacket decorated with rows of satin cording and tied at the waist with a broad satin sash.

Mrs. Roosevelt selected also for street and hotel wear a long coat ensemble consisting of a reversible coat in two shades of wine-red wool and a dress of light "Zombie" red made with high draped neck and long tight sleeves. On the lighter side of the coat scallops of darker Burgundy material are appliqued about the edges.

Dyed to match this ensemble was the sailor hat of Burgundy felt, trimmed with four feather wings of the same color.

A day-length dinner dress of slate-blue wool was embroidered with gold threads in a pattern of leaves and flowers extending across the bodice and below the waist on either side.

A black velvet day dress severely cut and a full-length evening dress of black velvet trimmed with revers of pearl embroidery were included in the wardrobe. The gayest of the costumes was a black crepe dinner dress topped with a bodice and jacket of Persian rose beaded with aqua and rose in a design reminiscent of last springs Persian art exhibit.

$961 Is Needed To Complete Fund For Clinic Building

Just $961 is needed to complete the building fund of the Alexandria Community Health Center, which within a month will open its $12,000 clinic building adjacent to Alexandria Hospital, Finance Chairman John W. Ayres said yesterday; $98 has been contributed in the last three days.

All exterior work on the building has been completed, Ayers said, and equipment is being moved in. The clinic will operate for the treatment of indigent Alexandrians.

The building fund was established more than a year ago, when an anonymous donor contributed $5,000 for construction of a clinic. The city council later donated $3,000 and the balance has been raised through public subscription.

Meeting with Hazen were Commissioners McCoach and Young and Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways; Corporation Counsel Elwood Seal, Richmond B. Keech, vice chairman of the PUC, and Auditor Daniel Donovan.

100 Warships Will Return From Hawaii

30 Vessels Already Steaming to Coast, Knox Announces

By the Associated Press

San Diego, Calif., Sept. 16.—Col. Frank Knox, Secretary of the Navy, said that the first contingent of the United States Fleet left Hawaii today for the Pacific Coast. Two other contingents of the fleet, numbering approximately 30 vessels each, also will return to the mainland, Knox said.

Each contingent will remain two weeks for overhaul of the ships and to provide the men with shore leave.

The Secretary said he believed about 100 Navy vessels would return from Hawaii and that "30 or so" would constitute each of the three contingents. The second will leave Honolulu after the first returns from the mainland, and the third departs for the Pacific Coast upon the return to the islands of the second group of ships.

Base Preparations Sped

Knox said Admiral J. O. Richardson was returning with the first contingent.

The Secretary said no time was being lost in making the newly acquired Atlantic island bases ready for use. He said a Navy board had departed for Bermuda to look over sites and to recommend work to start with $25,000,000 made available for the bases.

Knox said airfields would be constructed and submarine, destroyer and cruiser bases established.

Because of the emergency, the Secretary said he did not favor at this time suggestions to build a second canal through Nicaragua to provide the United States with a second "lifeline" between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. He said construction of additional locks at the Panama Canal was under way and that this project was more important at present.

Land Attack Unlikely

Knox declared that he regarded the canal as vulnerable only from the air.

"The natural ground of that area makes a land attack virtually impossible," Knox said. "An attack by surface ships also would not be likely. God help any battleship that would get within the range of coast guns there. The antiaircraft defenses have been strengthened, too."

"However, aircraft itself is the best defense agains an air attack, and for that reason we are getting more planes and more bases."

Praising the exchange with England of destroyers for the eight Atlantic bases, Knox said they were "far more important than 50 overage destroyers."

Hopeful for Britain

Concerning the European war, Knox said the chance for a sucessful invasion of England was growing less every day.

"To invade Great Britain, Germany must destroy British air power, and it has by no means done that. Germany's 3-to-1 air advantage has dwindled because as the offensive nation it has lost more planes. Germany's losses usually are total—plane and pilots. Many English pilots, when their ship is disabled, can land on English soil and return to fight again.

"I believe England now has better than a 50-50 chance to win out, and I feel quite cheerful about it."

Text of President Roosevelt's Draft Proclamation

The text of President Roosevelt's Proclamation calling upon all men from 21 through 35 to register Wednesday, October 16, for compulsory military service follows:

REGISTRATION DAY
BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.
A PROCLAMATION

Whereas the Congress has enacted and I have this day approved the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, which declares that it is imperative to increase and train the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and that in a free society the obligations and privileges of military training and service should be shared generally in accordance with a fair and just system of selective compulsory military training and service; and

Whereas the said act contains, in part, the following provisions:

"Sec. 2. Except as otherwise provided in this act, it shall be the duty of every male citizen of the United States, and of every male alien residing in the United States, who, on the day or days fixed for the first or any subsequent registration, is between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-six, to present himself for and submit to registration at such time or times and place or places, and in such manner and in such age group or groups, as shall be determined by rules and regulations prescribed hereunder.

"Sec. 5. (A) Commissioned officers, warrant officers, pay clerks, and enlisted men of the Regular Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Public Health Service, the federally recognized active National Guard, the Officers Reserve Corps, the Regular Army Reserve, the enlisted Reserve Corps, the Naval Reserve, and the Marine Corps Reserve; cadets, United States Military Academy; midshipmen, United Naval Academy; cadets, United States Coast Guard Academy; me who have been accepted for admittance (commencing with the academic year next succeeding such acceptance) to the United States Military Academy as cadets, to the United States Naval Academy as midshipmen, or to the United States Coast Guard Academy as cadets, but only during the continuance of such acceptance; cadets of the advanced course, senior division, Reserve Officers' Training Corps or Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps; and diplomatic representatives, technical attaches of foreign embassies and legations, consuls, and consular agents of foreign countries, residing in the United States, who are not citizens of the United States, and who have not declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, shall not be required to be registered under section 2 and shall be relieved from liability for training and service under section 3 (B)."

"Sec. 10 (A) The President is authorized— (1) to prescribe the necessary rules and regulations to carry out the porvisions of this act;"

"(4) To utilize the services of any or all departments and any and all officers or agents of the United States and to accept the services of all officers and agents of the several States, Territories and the District of Columbia and subdivisions thereof in the execution of this act;"

"Sec. 14 (a) Every person shall be deemed to have notice of the requirements of this act upon publication by the President of a proclamation or other public notice fixing a time for any registration under section 2."

Now, therefore, I, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, under and by virtue of the authority vested in me by the aforesaid selective training and service act of 1940, do proclaim the following:

1. The first registration under the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 shall take place on Wednesday, the 16th day of October, 1940, between the hours of 7 a. m. and 9 p. m.

2. Every male person (other than persons excepted by Section 5 (A) of the aforesaid act) who is a citizen of the United States or an alien residing in the United States and who, on the registration date fixed herein, has attained the twenty-first anniversary of the day of his birth and has not attained the thirty-sixth anniversary of the day of his birth, is required to present himself for and submit to registration. Every such person who is within the Continental United States on the registration date fixed herein shall on that date present himself for and submit to registration at the duly designated place of registration within the precinct, district, or registration area in which he has his permanent home or in which he may happen to be on that date. Every such person who is not within the Continental United States on the registration date fixed herein shall within five days after his return to the Continental United States present himself for and submit to registration. Regulations will be prescribed hereafter providing for special registration of those who on account of sickness or other causes beyond their control are unable to present themselves for registration at the designated places of registration on the registration date fixed herein.

3. Every person subject to registration is required to familiarize himself with the rules and regulations governing registration and to comply therewith.

4. The times and places for registration in Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico will be fixed in subsequent proclamations.

5. I call upon the Governors of the several States and the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia to provide suitable and sufficient places of registration within their respective jurisdictions, and to provide suitable and necessary registration boards to effect such registration.

6. I further call upon all officers and agents of the United States, and all officers and agents of the several States and the District of Columbia and subdivisions thereof to do and perform all acts and services necessary to accomplish effective and complete registration; and I especially call upon all local election officials and other patriotic citizens to offer their services as members of the boards of registration.

7. In order that there may be full cooperation in carrying into effect the purposes of said act, I urge all employers and Government agencies of all kinds—Federal, State and local—to give those under their charge sufficient time off in which to fulfill the obligation of registration incumbent on them under the said act.

America stands at the crossroads of its destiny. Time and distance have been shortened. A few weeks have seen great nations fall. We cannot remain indifferent to the philosophy of force now rampant in the world. The terrible fate of nations whose weakness invited attack is too well known to us all.

We must and will marshal our great potential strength to fend off war from our shores. We must and will prevent our land from becoming a victim of aggression.

Our decision has been made.

It is in that spirit that the people of our country are assuming the burdens that now become necessary. Offers of service have flooded in from patriotic citizens in every part of the Nation, who ask only what they can do to help. Now there is both the opportunity and the need for many thousands to assist in listing the names and addresses of the millions who will enroll on registration day at school houses, polling places, and town halls.

The Congress has debated without partisanship and has now enacted a law establishing a selective method of augmenting our armed forces. The method is fair, it is sure, it is democratic—it is the will of our people.

After thoughtful deliberation, and as the first step, our young men will come from the factories and the fields, the cities and the towns, to enroll their names on registration day.

On that eventful day my generation will salute their generation. May we all renew within our hearts that conception of liberty and that way of life which we have all inherited. May we all strengthen our resolve to hold high the torch of freedom in this darkening world so that our children and their children may not be robbed of their rightful inheritance.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this sixteenth day of September in the year of Our Lord nineteen hundred and forty, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and sixty-fifth.

(Seal)

Franklin D. Roosevelt.

By the President; Cordell Hull, Secretary of State.

The statement issued by the President upon signing the conscription bill and fixing October 16 as the registration day follows:

America has adopted selective service in time of peace, and, in doing so, has broadened and enriched our basic concept of citizenship. Besides the clear democratic ideals of equal rights, equal privileges and equal opportunities, we have set forth the underlying other duties, obligations and responsibilities of equal service.

In thus providing for national defense, we have not carved a new and uncharted trail in the history of our democratic institutions. On the contrary, we have merely reasserted an old and accept 1 principle of democratic government. The militia system, the self-armed citizenry with the obligation of military service incumbent upon every free man, has its roots in the old common law. It was brought to this continent by our forefathers. It was an accepted institution in colonial days. At the time of the adoption of the Federal Constitution, nine of the thirteen States explicitly provided for universal service in their basic laws.

In those days, little was required in the way of equipment and training for the man in arms. The average American had his flintlock and knew how to use it. In addition, he was healthy, strong, and accustomed to hardship. When he reported for military duty, he brought with him his musket and his powder horn. His daily life inured him to the rigors of warfare.

Today, the art of war calls for a wide variety of technical weapons. Modern life does not emphasize the qualities demanded of soldiers. Moreover, behind the armed forces, we must have a munitions industry as a part of an economic system capable of providing the fighting man with his full requirements of arms and equipment. Many individuals, therefore, may serve their country best by holding their posts on the production line. The object of selective service is to provide men for our Army and Navy and at the same time disturb as little as possible the normal life of the Nation.

Selective service consists of four steps, which singly and in the group, have been developed to operate with the fairness and justice characteristic of free, democratic institutions. These steps are registration, classification, selection and induction.

Wednesday, October 16, has been set aside, on which day every male between 21 and 35, inclusive, will be expected to report to a neighborhood precinct to fill out a registration card and a registration certificate. The certificate issued to the individual will be carried by him as a testimonial to his acceptance of the fundamental obligation of citizenship. The registration card will be forwarded to the county clerk or similar official and will be delivered by him to the local selective service board. These boards, consisting of three men, each appointed by the President, upon recommendations of the State Governors, will be set up in more than 6,000 communities. When the States notify the national director of selective service that all of the local boards have completed this work, a national drawing by lot will determine the order of priority of the registrants in each local board area. The national priority list will be furnished to the local boards and the corresponding order of selection will be entered on the registration cards in their custody.

The priority established by the drawing will determine the order in which questionnaires will be mailed to the registrants. Upon receipt of these questionnaires the registrants will enter on these forms pertinent facts on the basis of which their final classification will be determined.

There will be organized in every community in our Nation advisory boards for registrants, composed of patriotic citizens, civilian volunteers, to assist registrants in presenting fairly the facts to be used in determining the place of each individual in the scheme of national defense.

After the return of these questionnaires, the local board, after due consideration, will place the registrants in one of four classes. In class I will be those who are available for immediate service; in class II, those who are deferred because of the essential character of the service they are rendering in their present occupations; in class III those individuals who should be deferred because of individuals dependent upon them for support; in class IV those specifically deferred by the terms of the act.

The total number of individuals needed by the armed forces will be prorated among the several States. In this allocation due consideration will be given to the number of men already furnished by the State for our military forces. Within each State a quota, in a similar manner, will be divided among the local boards. Thus, each locality will be asked to furnish its fair share of individuals for induction into our armed forces.

In each of these local board areas individuals between the ages of 18 and 35 be offered an opportunity to volunteer for a one-year period of service and training. Such applicants will be accepted before any other individuals are selected, provided they are suitable for military service. It will be the duty of the local board to select as many additional individuals as are necessary to fill the quota for that particular area.

Following the tentative selection of these individuals, a local medical examiner will examine them physically. If they are accepted, they will be sent forward for final physical examination by medical officers of the Army, Navy or Marine Corps. Those who pass will be inducted into the service.

In the military service they will be intelligently led, comfortably clothed, well fed, and adequately armed and equipped for basic training. By the time they get physically hardened, mentally disciplined and properly trained in fundamentals, the flow of critical munitions from factory to combat units will meet the full requirements for their advanced training.

In the military service, Americans from all walks of life, rich and poor, country-bred and city raised, farmer, student, manual laborer and white-collar worker, will learn to live side by side, to depend upon each other in military drills and maneuvers, and to appreciate each other's dignity as American citizens.

Universal service will bring not only greater preparedness to meet the threat of war, but a wider distribution of tolerance and understanding to enjoy the blessings of peace.

Complete Text of Wendell Willkie's Address Given at Coffeyville, Kansas

American Democracy Is in Danger, Candidate Declares

Coffeyville, Kas., Sept. 16 (AP). The text of Wendell L. Willkie's address here today:

I am here today to open a campaign. It is a political campaign, it belongs to our American traditions.

In very few places in the world is it possible for a man to do what I am doing here. In very few places is it possible for a freely chosen candidate to appear before a free people, for the purpose of giving free political expression to views contrary to those of the government in power.

I want humbly to thank God that we can still do that in the United States of America.

The very reason I am here is to assure that your sons and mine, when they grow up, will be able to do this same thing.

And because this act of political fredom can be duplicated in so few places, we dare not accept it lightly or take it for granted. In a larger sense the campaign of 1940 is not just a political campaign. In my acceptance speech at Elwood I called it a crusade. The more I see of world events, the more do I think of this campaign in that light.

"Philosophy Is in Flames"

As I speak, a great city on the other side of the Altantic Ocean is in flames. Bombs have damaged some of the most beautiful structures in the world—the milestones of civilization. Gas and water mains are riped open, houses are blown to pieces, women and children lie dead, and others flee for protection to stuffy shelters below the ground.

I wonder if we realize what is burning over there. We say it is a city, the capital of the British Empire, a place named London. But it is much more than that. A philosophy is in flames, a way of life is in peril. We can almost see this with our eyes.

And I wonder what stands between us and that calamity except a smoth radio voice offering us the gold brick of safety without sacrifice. We are all just as much concerned with the Battle of Britain as Mr. Roosevelt. But we must be more concerned right now with the battle of America. That battle comes first.

The Battle of Britain is very vivid in our minds. We see democracy burning in London. But it seems far away, over here democracy seems to be safe. We want fearfully and anxiously to prepare ourselves against any possible military attack. But it doesn't seem to us that we have to worry about democracy or our institutions of liberty and law.

But I am here to tell you that this is a delusion. I want to tell you that although our cities are not in flames, American democracy is in danger. It is in danger from without and from within. And it is danger from without because it is in danger from within. This is our battle of America.

I am here to declare that the fundamental issue of this campaign is the preservation of democracy itself.

I know there are many present who will say: "Democracy is not an issue between the two major parties in the United States. Mr. Roosevelt is also a defender of democracy. He has said so many times."

Yes, it is true: Franklin Delano Roosevelt has stepped forth upon the stage of history in the ambitious role of defender of democracy. The scenery on that stage has been exactly suited to his requirements. Shifting from disaster to disaster, it has provided him with magnificent opportunities to make speeches. These speeches divert Mr. Roosevelt's audience. They divert its attention from exactly what he wants to hide—the fundamental, I will say the tragic, weakness of his own part in the play.

Claims New Deal Failed

In the first place, while listening to Mr. Roosevelt's oratory about democracy, it is all too easy to forget that one of the biggest factors in the present crisis in world affairs was the failure of the United States, under his Administration, to recover from the depression of 1932.

That world-wide depression provides the background for the current war. The democracies were struggling to liberate themselves from its grip. Many, including Britain, almost succeeded in doing so, and even pushed their recovery above the levels of 1929. Prosperity in America and trade with America were just what these countries needed to become really strong. Our recovery would have acted on them like a tonic.

But Mr. Roosevelt was heedless of his responsibility. He launched a political attack against our enterprises; he kept our economic system in turmoil; he made our depression permanent. Instead of leading the way to a new world, this Administration helped to drag the old world back into chaos. It materially assisted Hitler in his aggressive plans.

In the second place, Mr. Roosevelt's oratory, as the defender of democracy, conceals the fact that by his own meddling in international politics, he encouraged the European conflagration. For instance, he torpedoed the London Economic Conference in 1933 at the very time when the democracies were ready to come together on a strong, united economic policy. And he was the godfather of that unhappy conference at Munich—the conference from which the word "appeasement" was born—the conference from which Hitler went forth to destroy the European democracies.

My fellow countrymen, I deny that Franklin Roosevelt—whatever his intentions—is the defender of democracy.

First, I charge that his influence has weakened, rather than strengthened, democracy throughout the world.

And secondly, I charge that here in America he has strained our democratic institutions to the breaking point. I warn you—and I say this in dead earnest. If, because of some fine speeches about humanity, you return this Administration to office, you will be serving under an American totalitarian government before the long third term is finished.

Let me make myself clear. I say nothing about the personal motives of Mr. Roosevelt. He is a man educated and reared in American traditions. He may not want dictatorship. But in his hands our traditions are not safe. He has lost his grip on our American principles. He gives lip service to them but he does not know how to perserve them. He has put our democratic system in danger of its life.

The issue we have to decide in this campaign is whether the political rights that I am exercising today, shall endure; or whether we shall leave in the hands of the President of the United States, now seeking office, the power to destroy our system.

Goal of Campaign

That is the substance of the charge I bring. That goal—the preservation of democracy—will be the goal of my campaign.

In seeking that goal I shall not confine myself to the traditional arguments between Democrats and Republicans. I am not setting forth primarily to debate tax policies or spending policies. I shall discuss those problems, draw the issues, and recommend changes or improvements. But those are not the issues that raise this campaign to the level of a crusade.

I repeat that the thing that is burning in London today is a philosophy. Let me fix this fact firmly in your hearts. This is no economic theory that can save democracy. There is no technical remedy. There is no nostrum. All the relief money in the world will not help the unemployed to become hopeful and self-reliant citizens. If we are to save democracy we must save the roots of democracy. We must save the philosophy.

Believe me, that is my purpose. I shall go up and down this land preaching the doctrine of freedom, the doctrine of equality, the doctrine of democracy.

This doctrine, and this alone, opens the way to a new world.

We were all children once, and as children we learned certain things. Our mothers taught us to be honest, to be polite, to be pleasant and kind with other people. Our fathers taught us to be brave; they taught us that we must look out for ourselves, that we must make our way—our own way—in the world, and that we must prepare for the responsibilities of our own parenthood.

We learned also many things at school. We learned the history of our country. Twenty-seven years ago I taught American history here in the Coffeyville High School. In teaching some of you about our country I learned much more than I taught. I learned that democracy is not what we call the Government. Democracy is the people.

At school we learned other things. We got our first lessons in how to get along with others. we learned gratitude. We learned how to play fair, and we tasted the excitement of competition within the rules of the game. We learned the meaning of companionship as well as the meaning of self-reliance.

And also in Sunday school and church we learned many things. We learned there the value of giving to each other. We learned that when men hate each other something precious is destroyed in the lives of those who hate as well as in other lives. We acquire a sense of responsibility to God, whom we could not visualize, but in whom we believed.

FINDS HIS VOICE—Nominee Willkie as he addressed crowd of 35,000 in Coffeyville, Kans., yesterday, opening his campaign speaking tour

All these lessons were our preparation for democracy. I take time out to remind you of them, while London is burning, because without them democracy cannot survive and cannot be defended. When I stand for democracy I stand for these lessons of our childhood.

There is a simple reason for this. Several centuries ago men began to think of themselves in a new way—a way that they learned from Christianity. They said that each individual should be equal before the law, as before God. They said that each should be free. And they set up certain safeguards to equality and freedom which we in America call the civil liberties. Millions of men have suffered to win those liberties, and have died to protect them. Among those heroes were my ancestors, and yours.

Out of this new way of life grew a political system vital to our existence. Some day soon I shall want to talk about that political system and to show how the New Deal is in the course of destroying it.

Also out of the new way of life there grew up an economic system more abundantly productive than any ever devised. The industrial majesty of the United States resulted directly from the operation of this system of private enterprise. The New Deal has almost destroyed it—and I shall want to talk about that, too.

But today, at the opening of this campaign, let us dedicate ourselves to those fundamental values we learned at school, without which democracy cannot exist. Let us recognize that democracy is not somehing that just anybody can have. The gangster who makes a career of theft and murder is an enemy of democracy. If we were a nation of gangsters we should have to find another, more primitive form of government. Democracy is the highest form, and the hardest to keep. To have it and to hold it we must understand, and believe and insist upon, the homely virtues that we learned when we were boys and girls.

Only we, the people, can save our country. And we can do so only if we are worthy of our country.

We are told that those lessons of our childhood are just old-fashioned folkways, which have been superseded by new ways—the ways of the New Deal. But you know and I know that we have had no new deal in morals.

During the past eight years I have not heard enough from the New Dealers—those great "defenders" of democracy—concerning these fundamental values on which democracy rests. And I do not find the New Deal candidate campaigning on those values today.

This is extremely important to me. Democracy is rooted in the people. The Chief Executive of a democracy must therefore believe in the people, and in the values that the people believe in.

Further, he must have a deep faith in our sense of responsibility. He must know that each of us is eager to bear his or her responsibility. He must have faith in our willingness to carry our share of the load, and in our ability to do so.

A man who does not believe in us cannot govern us in the democratic way.

The charge I make against Franklin Roosevelt is that he has lost that confidence. Franklin Roosevelt has lost faith in the American people.

Just look at the men surrounding him. They are cynics who scoff at our simple virtues. They think that the people are too dumb to understand democracy. Their idea is that they, the intelligentsia, can govern us with catch phrases and sleight-of-hand.

These cynics sneak through back doors and pull hidden wires. A few of them form an illegitimate cabinet that gets the President's ear when few others can. We have paid billions of dollars to give food and relief to stricken men, women and children, but the New Deal cynics use this money to manipulate votes. They terrorize whomever they dislike by "leaking" out stories that have no basis in fact. They "purge" members of Congress who try to be independent of the New Deal machine.

The cynicism of these men has spread through Washington and down into the roots of our democracy. Because it does not trust us, our Government no longer feels obliged to tell us the truth.

Thus when Hitler began his attack against the Netherlands, we in this country became alarmed at the state of our defenses. The President talked to us, explaining the need for defense. Having thoroughly aroused us he then gave another talk to reassure us concerning the record of the New Deal. And in this second talk he defended his Administration with the deceptive phrase "on hand or on order." As it turned out, most of the equipment he was talking about so confidently was merely "on order," some of it not to be delivered for two or three years.

If the President trusted us, surely he would not have misrepresented the strength of our military establishment when we were so anxious to know the truth.

Charges Use of Subterfuges

He has used other subterfuges. I guess we were supposed to believe that he was drafted for a third term by the free votes of the delegates to the Democratic convention. I guess we are also supposed to believe that his appearance at carefully photographed occasions, at public parks and dams, is not political. I guess we Americans are supposed to pay our taxes cheerfully so as to finance his trips to the armament factories, confident that he is not even thinking about the campaign. I guess we are supposed to believe that Mr. Roosevelt doesn't really want to be President.

I say that all this is a travesty of democratic government. We are treated like gullible children. At a most critical hour in American history the party in power is asking for your confidence without discussing the fundamental issues. It thinks it can win your votes with hatchet men, who mouth muddle-headed words like "appeasement" and who distract your attention from the real issues by indulging in personal vituperation.

When we talk about representative government we do not mean a governmentt that represents the worst in us. We mean a government that represents the best in us.

Never in the history of modern democracy has a Government failed more flagrantly to trust the people. Never has a Government shown a lower opinion of the people.

And don't you see the inevitable result? Instead of giving responsibility to you, where it belongs in a democracy, he has taken it away from you and assumed it himself.

And what does an increase in responsibility mean? Why, it means an increase in power. Because he does not trust us, this man, who claimes to "defend" democracy, has concentrated the power in his own hands.

He now has power, among other things, to close all of our banks whenever he wishes: to change overnight the value of the money you and I carry in our pockets; to raise and lower the tariff; to issue several billion dollars worth of paper money on his own say-so; to close the stock exchanges. If he declared another emergency he could close all the broadcasting stations. He has declared 40 emergencies in the last seven years.

This desperate concentration of power is always, and it must always be, the beginning of the end of democracy. Already it has choked our enterprises and deprived our unemployed of their rightful opportunities. Already it has weakened all the other democracies in the world.

But this is not the end of it. The failure of Mr. Roosevelt's faith has caused him to take one further, and perhaps fatal, step. When the world was at peace he would not trust us to run our own enterprises. Now that the world is at war he will not trust us to defend ourselves.

The Army, the Navy, and almost all independent authorities who have studied the subject, are agreed that the speediest way to build an armament industry without hurting our democratic institutions is by delegating authority to a temporary civilian agency. At the end of the emergency this agency is disbanded and its extraordinary power is automatically dissolved.

But the President will not trust even us here. He will not permit our industries, who know this job, to take it on. He has set up an Advisory Defense Commission with some eminent industrialists included in its membership, but he has deliberately refused to appoint a chairman. The commission is therefore incapable of reaching decisions by itself and it must consult directly with the President.

As a result, our huge defense program must flow across the desk of this one man—a man, incidentally, who has never had any experience in industry, and whose desk is already crowded with the affairs of state. Suppose one of you farmers had the same attitude toward your farm. Suppose you had a big farm and insisted on doing all the chores yourself, and all the harvesting, and in addition making all the deliveries and keeping all the accounts. You know what would happen. Well, that is just what is happening to our defense program.

Cites Need for Trust

I have five farms in Indiana, and I make a modest profit on them. But I don't pitch the hay myself. I trust someone else to do it.

Until we have a man in that office who trusts the American people we shall never be able to defend ourselves from threat or aggression.

I pledge you that trust and confidence.

We Americans who have grown up in the ways of liberty must realize what this means to us. The doubt in the President's heart has so weakened this country that Mr. Roosevelt is being pushed—I believe against his will—toward unconstitutional government.

He is being pushed by the foreign situation, in which he considers himself justified in violating the Constitution.

He is being pushed by the failure of his own domestic policies to relieve us of unemployment, which has been the root of dictatorship in other lands.

He is being pushed by his own incompetence to deal with American industry—an incompetence from which his only escape can be confiscation of our enfeebled enterprises.

He is being pushed by his cynical advisers, who have invented all sorts of tricks to short-circuit the democratic process.

I warn you. This is the man and these are the methods that failed to bring recovery during more than seven years when democracy was at stake in the rest of the world.

And I say that this same man, using these same methods, will fail to build a defense system now that democracy is at stake right here in the United States.

When I read of blood and destruction in Europe I am frightened to think that our only shelter is—not airplanes and tanks—but a man who in seven years of peace could not get factories producing our peacetime needs. When I reflect that, regardless of the outcome of the war, its effect will be to put us in competition with bossed and servile labor in exhausted nations elsewhere, I have no confidence in the leadership of the man who, in seven years of accumulating power, could not make one man a job.

A man who cannot save democracy in peace, cannot save it in crisis. No man can save democracy who has lost his faith in the people. Sooner or later—and I say the time is now—the people will lose faith in him.

"I Represent Your Power"

I am here to represent that faith. I represent your power, the power of the people, to judge, to choose, and to elect in a political campaign. This power you have not yet given away to Mr. Roosevelt. If you elect me as your President you will never give it away to anybody.

I shall preserve this power of yours because I believe in you.

I believe in your sense of responsibility. I believe in your desire to share the burden of making this Nation effective and strong.

I call upon you, therefore, to help me fight this battle of America. I call upon you to awaken your fellow citizens to these moral and spiritual values, without the exercise of which our democarcy must inevitably contract into dictatorship. I call upon you to exact of every man in Government office the same standards of courage, of honesty, of thrift, of enterprise, and of humanity, that you exact of yourselves.

And I turn to that vast, mistaken, deluded government of ours in Washington, and I say: give our country back to us. We want it. We love it. We should like to share the burden of it amongst ourselves. We should like if necessary to suffer for it, so that we may pass it on intact to other generations.

Fight Brews For House Leadership

Four Men in Contest To Succeed Rayburn, Elected Speaker

Decisions on the election date and open campaigns for any of the four aspirants will await the burial today of the late Speaker. Leaders will confer today on the return train trip from Jasper and at key conferences at the Capitol tomorrow.

One solution suggested in responsible quarters was the temporary selection of Representative Lindsay Warren, of North Carolina, who is retiring from the House to become Comptroller General. If this course is followed, Warren would assume the leadership duties only for the remainder of the session, with the choice of a permanent leader deferred until January.

Election Recess Near

Congress has only two or three more weeks to run before it adjourns or recesses over the election period. Some of the party's elder statesmen would like to avoid a pitched Democratic House battle on the eve of election. The leadership election was delayed similarly following the death of Speaker Joseph W. Byrns.

At least two of the probable candidates took strong exception to any plans for delay—McCormack and Boland.

"I think it is in the best interest of the party and the country that the majority leadership be filled before this session closes," said McCormack.

Boland said he thought no purpose would be served by postponing the election.

Boland, who promptly told newsmen he would be a candidate, said a Democratic caucus should be called immediately after the funeral. The Pennsylvania Democrat, who had worked closely with Bankhead and Rayburn as part of the leadership organization, is expected to resign as majority whip if he fails of election as leader.

Rayburn Remains Aloof

Rayburn is remaining aloof from the contest. The second Texan to be Speaker of the House, Rayburn also became the second man in history to be elected to that post without opposition. Bankhead was the first. House Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin, jr., who ordinarily would have been nominated by Republicans, withdrew in advance. Martin is in line for the Speakership if Republicans win 48 or more seats in November, enough to reorganize the House.

Rayburn's name was placed in nomination by McCormack, whose friends claimed for him an early lead in the leadership contest. The New England delegations were working for McCormack, and some 75 pledges including many from the West and deep South, were said to have been collected up to last night.

McCormack supporters were particularly seeking Western and Southern support, to avoid the sectional issue. But the South and the border States, who have controlled the key leadership jobs for many years, were not expected to surrender the honor without a bitter struggle. If McCormack is elected, Massachusetts can lay claim to both Majority and Minority Leader Martin hailing from North Attleboro, Mass. Generally in the thick of the battle for Administration measures, McCormack has been frequently independent. Each of the other three aspirants voted against the Fish amendment.

Cooper Is New Dealer

Of the three other contestants, Boland and Cooper have been the most "regular" on New Deal measures. Woodrum, like McCormack, has not hesitated to take issue with the Administration on occasions and before the national defense emergency led several successful economy "revolts." The Virginian will attract the conservative vote.

Cooper, who as chairman of the House tax sub-committee has been one of the President's chief consultants on fiscal legislation, is a thorough-going New Dealer. He comes from Tennessee, which sent the late Speaker Byrns to the House rostrum, and represents the same Tennessee district formerly represented by Finis Garrett, a former Democratic minority leader of the House.

Backers of Boland point to his years of yeoman service as head of the Administration's House whip organization and cite the urgency of swinging Pennsylvania into the Democratic column in the coming elections. Choice of Boland, they contended, also would insure his return to Congress, from a usually doubtful district.

Willkie Sees Dictatorship Peril in U. S.

Walter, and are still my hero."

Willkie, wearing a blue suit with polka-dot tie, was a buoyant figure as his 12-car campaign train headed for Coffeyville.

Arriving in Coffeyville, Willkie rode through gaily decorated streets to a baseball ground that had been christened "Willkie Park."

In delivering his speech, he held himself to his manuscript, resisting the temptation to pound his fist and look out over the crowd. The result must have been a better radio performance than the Elwood speech.

"I wonder if we realize what is burning over there. We say it is a city, the capital of the British Empire, a place named London. But it is much more than that. A philosophy is in flames, a way of life is in peril. We can almost see this with our eyes.

"And I wonder what stands between us and that calamity except a smooth radio voice offering us the gold brick of safety without sacrifice. We are all just as much concerned with the Battle of Britain as Mr. Roosevelt. But we must be more concerned right now with the battle of America. That battle comes first."

Willkie was interrupted here by a vigorous applause.

The nominee said that the world-wide depression provided the background for the current war. Britain, and the other democracies, he said, needed prosperity in America to become really strong. Our recovery would have acted on them like a tonic.

"But Mr. Roosevelt was heedless of his responsibility," Willkie said. "He launched a political attack against our enterprises; he kept our economic system in turmoil; he made our depression permanent. Instead of leading the way to a new world, this Administration helped to drag the old world back into chaos.

"In the second place, Mr. Roosevelt's oratory, as the defender of democracy, conceals the fact that by his own meddling in international politics, he encouraged the European conflagration.

"For instance, he torpedoed the London economic conference in 1933 at the very time when the democracies were ready to come together on a strong, united economic policy.

"And he was the godfather of that unhappy conference at Munich—the conference at which the word 'appeasement' which Henry Wallace likes so much was born—the conference from which Hitler went forth to destroy the European democracies."

Assails Cynics

The crowd again interrupted Willkie with cheers and hat-waving.

Willkie said that Roosevelt had lost confidence in democracy, and as proof he pointed to the men who surrounded him—cynics who "scoff at simple virtues;" intelligensia who "think that the people are too damn dumb to understand democracy;" members of an illegitimate cabinet" who use relief money to manipulate votes, and who terrorize people and seek to "purge" members of Congress.

He assailed President Roosevelt for his "subterfuges" in seeking a third-term and in now avoiding a debate.

"I guess," said Willkie, "we are supposed to believe that he was drafted for a third term by the free vote of the delegates to the Democratic convention. I guess we are also supposed to believe that his appearance at carefully photographed occasions, at public parks and dams, is not political. I guess we Americans are supposed to pay our taxes cheerfully so as to finance his trips to the armament factories, confident that he is not even thinking about the campaign. I guess we are supposed to believe that Mr. Roosevelt doesn't really want to be President."

The crowd laughed and jeered at this sally.

"Go get him, Wendell," a farmer in sombrero yelled.

In talking about President Roosevelt's deception about equipment for the Army, the former A. E. F. captain departed from his speech to say:

"No doughboy ever made the mistake of firing a rifle that was on order."

Wilkie assailed Roosevelt's failure to get American industry going in peacetime.

"A man who cannot save democracy in peace," he said, "cannot save it in crisis. No man can save democracy who has lost his faith in the people. Sooner or later—and I say the time is now—the people will lose faith in him."

Willkie deviated from his prepared text to say:

"This Government and this way of life of ours is the most precious thing in all the world. If I, coming back to this town, can but play a small part in the discussions that lead to its preservation, I shall be content.

"I am honestly striving to occupy the most important office in the world but whether I occupy it or not—I say it on this ground that is almost sacred to me because it carries the memory of one of my first adventures into the world—whether I ever occupy that office or not I shall be satisfied if I can but arouse the American people to the hazard of the destruction of democracy and the democratic way of life and tell them repeatedly that we cannot save it alone in America, that if it passes out in other places, its hazard becomes double here.

"Thank you and God bless and keep you."

Willkie's headquarters announced today that Brooks Enemy, of Cleveland would replace J. Leslie Buell as his campaign adviser on foreign affairs. Buell, a former editor of Fortune magazine, was stricken ill in Kansas City yesterday.

Wells Church, radio director for the Republican National Committee, who is traveling with Willkie, was gratified by the nominee's improved technique at the microphone.

All along the line today, Dr. Harold D. Barnard, the California throat specialist, was watching Willkie like a hawk. Dr. Marnard would stand on the edge of a crowd and every time that Willkie's voice threatened to crack, he would signal to an assistant on the platform, who would nudge Willkie to take it easy.

Leaving Coffeyville, Willkie proceeded to Claremore, Okla., home town of the late Will Rogers, humorist, where he asked a train crowd to imagine what Rogers, if living today, would be saying about the speech the other night in which the President said he didn't know whether he was making a political speech or not."

The nominee got a big reception at Tulsa, where a crowd, estimated at 50,000 by Police Inspector George Reif, heard his speech at the fair grounds.

Orchestra Due Back Today

Leopold Stokowski's All-American Youth Orchestra, which will perform Friday in Constitution Hall, was scheduled to arrive in New York today aboard the S. S. Argentine after its Latin American tour.

The orchestra brought North American music to South America, but will return with South American music for the United States, Michael Myerberg, manager of the orchestra, reported that 300 records of native music had been made, several in each country visited.

"For one of these recordings," he said, "we sent a fleet of buses into the mountains from Dio to bring in a native witch doctor and his orchestra to play for us the weird 'Muskumba,' or native Brazilian witch music."

Myerberg said that the tour was successful "musically, culturally, financially, and especially from the urgently important aspect of fostering good will between the Americas."

"Good will was ours from the start," he added, "but it was even more evident from the time the news was flashed that the United States had acquired strong naval and air bases in the Atlantic and Caribbean."

Youth Back After Dodging Shells in France

Georgetown Student Spent Days in Ambulance 'Running From Germans'

After three months of dodging German shells from an ambulance in France, a week spent in a Spanish jail and a "jittery" Atlantic crossing, 23-year-old Donald King, of 4612 Hunt avenue, Chevy Chase, Md., is home again and glad to be there.

KING

Young King, a Georgetown University student, arrived in France with 23 others of the American Volunteer Ambulance Corps, at about the same time the Germans did, in May. Most of the summer he spent "running from the Germans," he said.

Biggest trouble King encountered was in maneuvering his American-made ambulance, larger than the French type, through tank barricades and over shell-torn roads. At one time, the French army unit to which he was attached evacuated a town just three hours before it was completely demolished by bombs.

Talked With German

He was sometimes within a mile of the Nazi line, but did not come into contact with "the enemy" until later, in Vichy, after the armistice, when Germans were seen frequently in the temporary French capital. He talked to one of them, who gave King such a sales talk on the German navy that he decided to attempt to join the United States Navy after he returned.

His week in jail came in the latter part of August, when the party of ambulance drivers, then numbering 32, crossed the French border to Spain on their way to an American ship at Lisbon. The Spanish civilian police were not sure what to do with them and so turned them over to the military police, who left them in a small military prison while they pondered.

Donald is not sure whether he will return to Georgetown this year or not, because of the draft. He plans to spend today finding what his chances are of getting a commission in the Army or Navy.

Another Washington ambulance driver, Col. John D. Wellborn, is still in New York, where he and King arrived together Friday. No word has been heard from him as yet by his business associates here.

Marvin Urges Faculty to Step Up Learning

Military Training Must Be Offset, Says President of G. W.

President Cloyd Heck Marvin, of George Washington University, last night urged his faculty to "step up" and revitalize learning to prevent military training from unbalancing the lives of the Nation's young people.

"We must maintain an appropriate balance in the lives of the young people we would serve," Dr. Marvin declared at the first faculty meeting of the year. "As we demand of them more time for preparedness, we must, if we carry the appropriate balance in life, step up learning in other fields so that life shall be well rounded."

That, he added, is the answer to the question, "What is the use of our continuing to lead young people in the ways of learning when they will ultimately be tools to be used in defense measures?"

'Isolation' Attacked

The responsibility of contributing to "the common defense," he pointed out, "is but one part of citizenship.

Dr. Marvin attacked the narrow specialization of educated men, their "isolation" in the study of the past, and their over-concern with "minutiae."

"I am convinced," he declared, "that if for the past 20 years scholars in this country and in Europe had assumed that the past was only important as it contributed to our daily living, and had constantly related all of their thinking to modern development, today we would not have a large number of scholars driven from their chairs of learning."

Men in various parts of the world have deserted freedom, he added, "because we have become more or less irresponsible in our learning and teaching, and intellectualism has become futile and reason has ceased to serve man."

Student Activities

He said that scholars and teachers have seen no necessity for relating their narrow fields of learning to the general welfare of mankind, and criticized the failure of learned men to accept responsibility for the "moral implications of the materials which they use."

Curran Ends Green Guards Investigation

Finds No Evidence To Justify Criminal Charge, He Reports

Authorities here yesterday closed an investigation of Green Guards of America, Inc., a women's "shoot the parachutists" group, with announcement by District Attorney Edward M. Curran that "criminal prosecution was not warranted by the evidence uncovered."

Mrs. Martha D. Werner, 1841 Columbia road northwest, resigned as president of the Green Guard chapter here two weeks ago and charged members did not receive benefits and facilities promised them when they paid their $5 initiation fees. That began the investigation.

Mrs. Virginia Nowell, Green Guard National president, retorted Mrs. Werner was displeased by the place assigned her in a parade.

District Attorney Curran questioned Mrs. Nowell and other officers and examined the Green Guard books.

In a formal statement last night, Mrs. Nowell accused Maj. Ernest W. Brown, chief of Metropolitan Police, of "persecuting" the Green Guards and declared the District Commissioners should ask Brown for an "explanation."

The statement described Curran's decision as "a complete vindication of the activities of the Green Guards and the patriotic women who are directing the affairs of this splendid organization.

"Of course, we knew that no other verdict was possible. The entire management of the Green Guards has been very conscientious in the fulfillment of its duties and obligations."

Former chief of the division of land patents in the Department of the Interior, Mr. O'Connell was active in the Knights of Columbus and the Ordway Rifles, an organization of local Spanish-American War veterans. He also served as superintendent of St. Anthony's Sunday School.

Thomas Finds Belief Roosevelt Will Quit

Portland, Oreg., Sept. 16 (AP).—Norman Thomas, perennial Socialist Party candidate for the Presidency, said today there is a "growing feeling that Roosevelt, if reelected, will resign soon after he takes the oath of office and make Henry A. Wallace President."

"If this impression gets around that the President is going to resign—in order to break another national precedent—it will defeat Roosevelt," Thomas told an interviewer.

Chavez Holds Lead Over Dempsey

Representative Asks FBI to Investigate New Mexico Election

By the Associated Press

Albuquerque, N. Mex., Sept. 16.—With only a scattering of incomplete precincts yet to report, United States Senator Dennis Chavez held a small but apparently conclusive unofficial margin over Representative John J. Dempsey tonight in their bitter fight for the Democratic Senatorial nomination.

Unofficial returns from 875 of the 914 voting divisions in Saturday's New Mexico primary elections gave Chavez, 48,092; Dempsey, 46,034.

The battling Congressman, however, said in Santa Fe late today that there would be "30 to 40 FBI agents in Santa Fe by nightfall."

"These men are the same who investigated and disclosed the workings of the Pendergast gang in Kansas City," he declared.

"New Mexico political bosses do not seem to realize that the Hatch clean politics law is in effect. The people have been intimidated."

In the gubernatorial Democratic race, Gov. John E. Miles won two to one from Mayor Clyde Tingley of Albuquerque.

The Democratic Congressional race developed into a two-man contest between Clinton P. Anderson, Albuquerque insurance man, and Frank Patton, former State attorney general. Anderson, trailing for two days, jumped into the lead late today with little probability he would be headed.

Maurice Miera won handily in the Republican gubernatorial contest over cattleman-banker Seth Alston, of Lovington, while Rancher Albert Mitchell was G. O. P. Senatorial nominee by virtue of a lopsided win over former Gov. Richard C. Dillon, who had Townsend indorsement.

(In Washington, officials at the FBI said Dempsey had requested last week an investigation of alleged coercion and intimidation of voters in connection with his primary contest with Senator Chavez. The FBI declined to say what action, if any, was being taken.)

Wisconsin Primary

Milwaukee, Sept. 16 (AP).—Scrambled issues and a large ticket—traditional Wisconsin politics—faced the State's voters tonight as they squared away for tomorrow's primary election to choose candidates on a three-party ballot.

The death Sunday night in an automobile accident of Dr. Glenn Frank, nationally known Republican who sought his party's United States Senatorial nomination, added confusion to the election picture.

Estimates of the total vote ranged upward to 600,000.

The New Deal, La Folletteism and the Republican administration of Gov. Julius P. Heil furnished the main targets for a large field of candidates running under Republican, Democratic and Progressive banners.

Heil was opposed for the Republican nomination by James K. Robinson, of Milwaukee.

Five candidates aspired to the progressive nomination.

Four Democrats asked designation as their party's gubernatorial choice.

Ten candidates sought the opportunity to face Senator Robert M. La Follette, jr., unopposed for renominaton on the Progressve ticket, in November.

The names of William D. Carroll, chairman of the Democratic State committee; James E. Finnegan, former attorney general, and James J. Kerwin, of Milwaukee, appeared on the official ballot as Democrats.

Prominent Democrats sent out 250,000 stickers bearing the name of John Cudahy, United States Ambassador to Belgium during the blitzkrieg, as a write-in candidate opposing them.

Battle in Massachusetts

Boston, Sept. 16 (AP).—A bitter battle raged tonight between Attorney General Paul A. Dever and former Lieut. Gov. Francis E. Kelly, candidates for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, as they appealed at Greater Boston rallies for support in tomorrow's Massachusetts primaries.

The Republican campaign coasted along to a comparatively quiet finish. With but one exception—a six-cornered contest for the attorney general's nomination—the party entered uncontested the same slate, headed by Gov. Leverett Saltonstall, which, in 1938 ended a six-year Democratic rule in the Bay State.

N. Y. Vote Tomorrow

Albany, N. Y., Sept. 16 (AP).—New York's primary election tomorrow tests Democratic third term sentiment, Republican organization efforts to nominate election day "vote getters" and strength of American Labor Party support of President Roosevelt.

The balloting, political leaders believe, is likely to determine the fate of the State's 47 electoral votes in November.

Connecticut Convention

New Haven, Conn., Sept. 16 (AP).—A three-cornered fight for the U. S. Senatorial nomination held the attention of Connecticut Republicans tonight on the eve of their 1940 State convention.

The avowed candidates in the Senatorship field were Paul L. Cornell, preparatory school owner; former Lieutenant Governor Clifford B. Wilson, and Brig. Gen. John H. Parker, of New Haven, the Col. "Machine Gun" Parker of World War fame.

Senate Likely To Pass Tax Bill By End of Week

Put Off by Bankhead's Death, It Will Be Called Up Tomorrow

Deferred by the death of Speaker Bankhead, Senate debate on the excess-profits tax bill will be resumed tomorrow with prospects still bright for passage by the end of the week.

First of the pending amendments to be voted on tomorrow afternoon will prabably be the proposal of Senator Brown (Democrat), of Michigan, to remove Federal tax exemption from future issues of Federal and State bonds.

This amendment, believed to have a fair chance of passage in the Senate, would also permit States to tax future issues of Federal securities. Representing the majority views of the special Senate committee appointed to investigate the subject, the proposal has met opposition of many State and local officials who fear adverse effects on their bond issues.

Among the other proposed amendments to the tax bill is Senator Connally's war profits tax, which the Senate added to a revenue measure passed in June, but which was deleted in conference with House members.

This tax, to take effect if the Nation enters a state of war, would impose income levies as high as 88 per cent and fix the normal corporation tax at 35 per cent, with an excess-profits tax on all corporate income over 5 per cent of invested capital.

It was predicted by some observers yesterday that even if the Senate did approve the Brown or Connally amendments, or both, they would be knocked out of the bill in conference.

Aside from the tax bill and the final deficiency appropriation, the only remaining "must" measures appear to be the bill renewing the sugar import quotas which expire at the end of this year, and the bill to grant funds for carrying out the conscription act.

FIGURES IN SHOOTING—Oscar Rush, a bullet wound below the heart, fights for his life in Gallinger Hospital. Mrs. Rush (top), is fingerprinted at police headquarters by Sergt. Viggo Lawson in connection with the shooting said her husband then took her out riding to pacify her.

Mrs. Rush stated in a five-page signed statement that she married Rush two years ago at Pascagoula, Miss. Previously she had been married to Wallace Pruit, according to police, then an employe of the Farm Credit Administration. She said this marriage later was annulled. Pruit, who is now employed by the Navy Department here, once ran for Congress in Alabama.

Her marriage to Rush had been a round of continual arguments, she said, but she "loved him and I was afraid he would leave me." Yesterday, she said, Rush had told her he planned to quit his job and "leave town to get rid of you."

When Mrs. Rush arrived at work with her husband yesterday she said he went for "a drink." She decided to take a walk around the block, meanwhile, "thinking over," she said, "how he had abused me." When she returned she fired her weapon calmly, according to the two women witnesses, who were released after questioning by the homicide squad. They were Mrs. Gladys M. Jones, of 1941 Sixteenth street southeast, and Mrs. Lillian Davidson, 1525 Nineteenth street southeast. Both said they were "frightened speechless" when the single shot was fired which pierced Rush's chest.

Rush had a first marriage in 1918 in Washington, by which he has two sons living in Mobile, Ala. The sons are enroute to Washington from Alabama.

At Gallinger Hospital Rush was under an oxygen tent last night and was given a "slight chance" to recover.

Given seven pints of blood from Gallinger's blood bank in a series of transfusions, he rallied about 9:30 p. m. and recognized a friend in the room.

"Hello, Dave. A terrible thing," he said, then relapsed into unconsciousness. His physician, Dr. Garrett Rush, a cousin, said then his chances for recovery were better than previously.

Held at the woman's bureau on an open charge pending the outcome of her husband's condition, Mrs. Rush stated she was "sorry for him now" and hoped he would recover.

Mrs. Rush showed no signs of nervousness throughout her questioning and was calm when finger-printed.

Dr. Graebner, of Concordia Seminary, Testifies Against Third Term

DAVIS

Dr. Theodore Graebner, of Concordia Seminary, St. Louis, yesterday told a Senate judiciary subcommittee some "safeguard stronger than an unbroken tradition" against a third term is necessary to preserve democratic principles in this country.

Testifying at hearings on resolutions calling for a constitutional amendment to limit Presidential tenure in office to one term of six years, or two terms of four years each, Graebner said:

"Political power, when it reaches certain heights, tends to become despotic, and no despotism can permit the free diffusal of religious opinion."

Senator Burke (Democrat), Nebraska, chairman of the subcommittee, said among future witnesses will be John W. Davis, Democratic Presidential nominee in 1924, and Bainbridge Colby, Democratic Secretary of State under President Wilson.

New York, Sept. 16 (AP).—Francis E. Rivers, director of the Eastern Colored Division of the Republican National Committee, said today that President Roosevelt "is rapidly losing the Negro vote."

In a statement, Rivers said he had been "deluged" with messages of support for Wendell Willkie from Negroes in 10 Eastern and Midwestern States, as a result of the Republican candidate's speech in a Chicago ball park Saturday.

Because of the speech, Rivers said he expected a "complete reversal of the Negro support for Roosevelt in the November election."

New York, Sept. 16 (AP).—A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters (A. F. of L.), addressing delegates to the union's convention today, praised the "social and labor gains . . . under the New Deal" and demanded that they not be "sacrificed under the pretext of national defense."

Advocating rejection of Communism, abolition of the poll tax and "white" primaries, Randolph urged "labor unity by C. I. O. unions returning to the home of labor—the A. F. of L. . . ."

Reviewing a Double Bill That Isn't There Anymore

Wells' 'Things to Come' Too Close for Comfort; New Bills for the Palace and the Little; A Word for 'The Howards of Virginia'

By Richard L. Coe,
Substituting for Nelson B. Bell

SO SATURDAY EVENING we turned busman, had ourself a double-feature night off.

"Things to Come," the H. G. Wells film was part of the bill out at Silver Spring and, having tried for years to catch up with this one, we chugged northward to glimpse the prolific prophet's notion of the future.

Considering that it has for its beginning Christmas Eve of 1940, the eve of a cataclysmic world war, the impact of this four-and-a-half-year-old chiller is both stirring and sickening. Everytown is Mr. Wells' focus for his war of the future, an Everytown that has its unmistakable Picadilly Circus and a great domed church on a hill. And over the white cliffs of unnamed Dover fly swarms of planes that drop bombs which eventually will breed a disease called "the wandering sickness." To be sure, "Things to Come" goes further than our lifetime and does have a stirring glimmer of hope for the brave, but Mr. Wells views our times as utterly hopeless.

Despite all this, as you who've seen the picture may recall, "Things to Come" has a force that makes you think. And while it's a ponderous and too-long a film, its provocative quality made us glad we hadn't missed it after all.

Fearful of the commercial appeal of a revival for "Things to Come" we talked with the Little on the subject. It looks doubtful, for it did badly on its own a while back in Baltimore and you know how the boxoffice has fallen in love with escape product.

And what preceeded this excursion into the future, but episode ten of "Flash Gordon," as natty a contrast as ever Mr. Wells could hope to find. This "Low Brow" treatment of things to come would have you believe that there will still be masterful heroics by folk who look like Buster Crabbe, conniving, sleek women and super melodramatics. Funny thing is, the comic strip version is probably nearer the awful truth.

The news that "The Return of Frank James" comes into the Palace Thursday is welcome stuff after the first half of our Saturday double bill. That was called "Days of Jesse James," a release to which our reference books give us no glimmer of light. It has, however, nothing to do with the Tyrone Power film, nothing to do with the Palace newcomer, but a lot to do with the boys who followed the road to crime all because of those blank, blank bankers. Best line in its script was when the heroine came tripping into the hotel lobby: "The James boys are in town." Pause. "I THINK there's going to be a robbery!"

So when Frank James gets back to the Palace, we're looking forward to resuming respect for the boom-boom melos of the banker-ridden west.

ᔓᔕ

Some of our betters, in the periodical slicks as well as in the daily pulps, have less enthusiasm than we for "The Howards of Virginia." We think it's a an exceptional film because it attempts a large and difficult canvas and does remarkably well. And this Earle feature of Revolutionary days has a far stronger relationship with our times than did that well-liked Civil War cycle.

ᔓᔕ

When she was in town for "The Far-Off Hills" at Catholic University, Sara Allgood mentioned a film in which she had had a minor part called "The Night of The Fire" and had we seen it? No, we had not. Sifting the matter, the Little Theater investigated, found it in this country as "The Fugitive" starring Ralph Richardson and Diana Wynyard. Tomorrow morning it comes into the Little with "Forbidden Musie," costarring Richard Tauber and Jimmy Durante. Tonight it will be previewed at the last showing of "Mayerling."

ᔓᔕ

The absence of the topline above this column reading "Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops" has probably given you the clue that those bugs have again caught up with Mr. Bell. When we read his amusing allusion at breakfast yesterday to this reporter's midnight rendezvous with the new Clare Boothe book, "Europe in the Spring," we thought he had 'em licked. But those bright lines were written under duress and now the medicos are handling him again. Come on, Nels, the Redskins won; so can you!

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Sept. 16.

Signe Hasso, RKO's new Swedish star, doesn't want to be alone—she loves company. She's cute without being kittenish, and you'd never guess, looking into those innocent blue eyes, that she has an engineering husband and a 6-year-old boy back home. But how this girl has trouped. Born in Stockholm, toured all over Scandinavia since she was 12, playing everything from Shakespeare to Eugene O'Neill.

HOPPER

ᔓᔕ

She came to America by way of Russia and Japan, and stayed in the latter country a month to see what they were doing in the theater, which is fascinating. She saw a whole evening's entertainment made up of life-sized marionettes, with no strings attached, but it takes three men, who've spent three years learning how, to manipulate each marionette.

ᔓᔕ

When she was finally on a Japanese boat, bound for our shores, a Japanese walked into her stateroom, saying, "I'm sharing this room with you." And he did. They think nothing of selling tickets that way—seems to be a native custom. So she made the trip with a strang Oriental, and now talks about it. . . . A lot will depend on her getting the right picture. If she does, I believe you're in for a treat.

ᔓᔕ

Humphrey Bogart and Raoul Walsh left the other day for Lone Pine to become acclimatized. They've got to go to the peaks of Mount Whitney, some 11,000 feet up, to take the final shot of "High Sierra." But the dog, Pard, who really is Daisy from "Blondie," is too valuable to make the trek. So his stand-in, Zero, goes along.

ᔓᔕ

Which reminds me of our first Technicolor pictures, when they used so many lights that girls fainted by the dozen. But owner of the horses being used went up to the director and said, "You must let me take my horses outside for fresh air." So director said, "Open the doors—take the horses out for half an hour, but all actors stay in!"

ᔓᔕ

Now that Hedy Lamarr and Tony Martin are to be teamed, you can expect romantic rumors about them.

ᔓᔕ

Herman Wasserman, brilliant pianist who visited Pickfair before Lady Mendl arrived, told me the following, which reminded him of Hollywood. A friend of his was dining with a banker friend, tried to borrow $25,000. Banker said, "What's your collateral?"

"I haven't any, but you've known me more than 20 years. Surely you could tide me over for a few months."

ᔓᔕ

Banker thought a minute and said, "I'll tell you what. Nobody knows it, but I have one glass eye. If you guess which it is, you get the loan."

Without a moment's hesitation, friend said, "The left."

The banker looked at him with amazement, "How did you guess?"

His friend replied, "Because the left eye had a tiny flicker of sympathy in it."

Jack Chertok, head of Metro's short departemnt, can take a bow on "Brigham Young," because his short did it. About a year and a half ago, he made one about seagulls coming to Salt Lake and saving the crops, showed the statue of the gulls. Short was called "Miracle of Salt Lake." Darryl Zanuck saw it, was so impressed he called Louis B. Mayer and said if it wasn't going to be used, he'd like to make it the basis for a feature yarn on Brigham Young. Since then Metro shorts are being fine-combed for major ideas.

Colbert LearnsNew Crafts for Picture

Claudette Colbert arrived on a Paramount set to find herself faced with a new job—that of learning a smattering of shorthand, and a bit of two-finger typing ability for her role in "Arise My Love."

Miss Colbert plays the part of a newspaper woman in the romantic comedy—a newspaper woman in love with Ray Milland, aviator. The lessons were given her by Pauline Land, 19, of 1803 North Wilton place, Los Angeles.

"THE RED MIKADO"

is the title of this sketch from "Pins and Needles," which opens the National Theater season Monday evening. This Lord High Executioner is played by Harry Clark, while his adviser is Murray Modick. The satirical revue returns to E street with all new sketches, the only number remaining from its 1938 visit being the tuneful "Sunday in the Park"

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Sept. 16.

LOUIS SHURR, the theatrical agent, was awakened at 2 a. m. by a telephone call. He groped sleepily for the phone, yawned and said: "Hello" . . . A voice responded: "Hello, Mr. Shurr. I talk" . . . "You what?" asked Shurr, stirring from the fog of sleep . . . "I talk," repeated the voice. "Isn't it wonderful?" . . . What's so wonderful about it?" demanded the agent, preparing to return to his dream of booking all his clients into every Broadway show. "And what's the idea of waking me at 2 a. m. to tell me you can talk?" . . . "You don't quite understand," replied the practical joker. "I'm a horse."

MARSHALL FIELD will take over PM, with Ralph Ingersoll remaining as publisher . . . Sacha Guitry, who had refused to leave Paris, remained there to give eight performances of "Pasteur" and then was stopped by the Nazis, who sent him out of the occupied area—because one of Guitry's grandparents was non-Aryan. Guitry now is on the Riviera . . . "Scarface," the Paul Muni picture, was shown this week in a movie house on Forty-second street. This is the sixty-seventh time "Scarface" has been shown on that street . . . Samuel S. Leibowitz, the famed criminal lawyer, is expected to win the primaries by a landslide and score a record vote in the nomination for the county court bench.

ORSON WELLES, afer a year's delay, finally is filming his first movie, "Citizen Kane." Welles is aware of the fact that every official in the industry is marking his work and was fully prepared to meet the challenge. He was anxious, particulaly, to keep abreast of his shooting schedule, for he realizes the cost of delay. That's why the injury he suffered whe nhe fell—an injury which kept him confined to a wheel chair—was so disappointing . . . "That's still all right, Orson," an aide consoled on the day of his injury. "We won't lose time .You can start shooting those scenes in which you portray Old Man Kane sitting in a wheel chair" . . . "Itt's no use," Welles informed. "I finished shooting those wheel-chair scenes yesterday."

"IT'S SO SELDOM that a correction makes a better story," writes John O'Hara, "that I can't resist straightening you out on the stickful you had on my cigarette case. The case, a beauty, was given to me five years ago. Last year I heard about Webb Miller's case, which had been autographed by the President, George V, Stalin, Hitler, Mussolini and Gandhi, among others. (Gandhi, a tobacco hater, made Webb promise never to use it again for cigarettes.) So I thought I would have my case signed by my idea of the leading Americans in their various fields. For your information they are the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, Ernest Hemingway, Grant Wood, Toscanini, John Barrymore, Greta Garbo and, representing medicine, Paul de Kruif. I admit I had to naturalize Garbo and Toscanini.

JAMES ROOSEVELT took the case to Washington, to Hyde Park and back and forth between those points and Hollywood. The reason the case was so well traveled was that the President of the United States is not supposed to put his signature on something that has been signed before. I had my own signature on the case and the President at first refused to sign. But I guess he must have decided even that long ago that he could make a slight exception in the case (okay, take the pun) of a man who was for him in '32, in '36, and is for him in '40."

THE BALKAN KINGS are vanishing, and so it's appropriate to tell of the occasion when Will Irwin and his wife were about to be presented at the court of a Balkan ruler. Mrs. Irwin asked her husband about the customs at such presentations. "I bow, and you curtsy," Irwin answered . . . "But I don't know how to curtsy," Mrs. Irwin confessed . . . "I've seen it done any times," he husband declared. "I'll show you." And so for hours he taught the reluctant lady how to bend the knee and dip gracefully. When Mrs. Irwin had become expert at this they went to the palace where the presentation was to be made . . . They arrived before their Majsties. Mrs. Irwin gasped—and Will hurriedly curtsied.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Sept. 16 (INS).—Presidential campaigning in the family or not—you can put it down in your little book that Jimmy Roosevelt isn't going to have any time for politics. From here on in he's going to be busier than the proverbial one-armed paper hanger, supervising two productions—for Saturday he pulled a real coup when he signed Franchot Tone and Geraldine Fitzgerald for his "Martin Eden." With Lloyd Bacon, Warner's ace director, already promised to Jimmy and all set to report for work, "Martin Eden" will be on the fire about the same time his first, "Pot o' Gold," starts rolling.

PARSONS

What with the premiere tomorrow night of the Roosevelt "soundies," along with the plans for his feature pictures, the eldest son of the President is a remarkably busy young man. Frankly, I admit I am amazed at the talent Producer Roosevelt has has been able to line up. Jimmy Stewart will star in "Pot o' Gold," and with Tone and Miss Fitzgerald set for his other film he has three of the top names in Hollywood to add luster to his debut productions.

ᔓᔕ

You think you've seen Western movies? Well, a Western to end all Westerns, "The Saga of the American Cowboy," is being planned by M-G-M, with none other than Will James, famous Montana writer and artist, scripting it. I am particularly interested in hearing that James will show the evolution of the American cowboy and how he came into existence. We think we know all about Western life—but hoy many of you bright boys and girls know how or why the rodeo came to be—or the authentic history of cattle branding? I don't need to explain Will James to my young readers, for his book about a prairie horse, "Smokey," has been a juvenile best seller for years, and his black and white Western sketches are internationally famous. So far no cast is lined up, but three top M-G-M male stars will vie for honors in chaps and sombrero.

At dinner the other night some of Lewis Milestone's friends were discussing the story he has just bought—"The Red Pony," by John Steinbeck. Some of them thought he was very wise and others wondered if Steinbeck would get them into the theaters. That, I suppose, depends on the story. "Of Mice and Men" didn't do as well as you might expect, for it was a grand picture, but "Grapes of Wrath" cleaned up, especially in England. Milly feels this Steinbeck property is a good investment and he has been in conference with the author, who has given him many suggestions. I have an idea that RKO or United Artists will release the picture, which will be made as the next Milestone production.

Snapshots of Hollywood Collected at Random: You needn't be surprised if Gilbert Roland and Constance Bennett kiss and make up and you needn't be surprised if Connie gets her divorce from the Marquie de la Falaise sooner than you and I expect; Deanna Durbin gave a baby shower for her sister, Mrs. Clarence Heckman, who has a date with the stork; Elaine Shepard and Alexis Thompson are being seen together in New York. Wonder if his romance with Betty Grable is over? A new and very interesting twosome is Ellen Drew and Bob Preston.

The Ernst Lubitsches had dinner Friday night aboard the Southern Cross yacht with the owner of the boat in San Pedro harbor. That was the ship which rescued their baby when the Athenia was torpedoed; one of our leading Hollywood movie columnists had the surprise of his life when one of the newer movie reporters offered him twice his weekly salary to write that person's column; Joe Peppino, who can cook spaghetti as no other American (Joe is now a citizen) catered for Elsa Maxwell's dinner honoring Lady Mendl. Hal Roach, who has been dieting, forgot his calories; Irene Dunne, who need not worry about her figure, ate it all, and so did Virginia Zanuck, Frances Goldwyn and Margaret Roach, who are also slim princesses. At my end of the table Tim Durant and John McClain talked about the Presidential campaign, and interestingly, too.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow from New York!

'East Lynne' Extends Local 'Barn' Season

"East Lynne" is remaining for a third week at the Roadside, thereby prolonging the local barn theater scene for an additional week. They aren't saying that this is the ultimate seven days, but since "East Lynne" has to stop sometime, it's very likely it must next Saturday.

But Mrs. Henry Wood's tragical story of Lady Isabel is not the only reason for rejoicing in this extended engagement. It allows further merriment for Bibby Osterwald's "My Mother Was a Lady," most dramatic and stomach-shaking entr'acte the Rockville Pike has ever heard.

At this date there isn't much more to say about "East Lynne." It's a better play than many a theatergoer has anticipated, but it has its soaring speeches and ringing lines the way all well-behaved Roadside revival does. Lady Isabel is beautifully played by Betty Gray, Larry Lawrence's hero is as handsome, admirable chap as Norman Rose's sleek villain is fascinatin' to watch. Kenneth Banghart, Lois Alexander, Florence Konold, Edna Evans and Jack Salamanca are in the cast. Altogether it's pretty rare stuff.

Indo-China Bases Foreseen for Japan

Chinese Believed Set to Cross Border If Colony Yields

By C. Yates McDaniel
Associated Press Staff Writer

Hanoi, French Indo-China, Sept. 16.—France was believed in well-informed quarters here tonight to be in imminent peril of losing French Indo-China to Japan.

French officials admit privately that negotiations—already approved in principle by Vichy and Tokyo—are likely to result within a few days in an agreement permitting Japan to establish perhaps 25,000 troops on Indo-China soil.

Authoritative French, Japanese and foreign sources say this may prompt China to send her own soldiers across the colonial frontier and precipitate a conflict which might mean the beginning of the end of France's 60-year rule of this East Asian territory of 230,000 square miles.

In all quarters, official and civilian, the conviction is expressed that only the United States could prevent Japan, from gaining a possibly unshakeable hold, but fear of arousing Japanese feelings has prevented Indo-China authorities even from soliciting such aid.

Planes Lacking

French sources said that a mission had been sent to the United States last July, but that both it and the government here had failed to obtain warplanes and other material sought in the United States.

The French military command holds that the colony's 20,000 French and 100,000 native troops have enough artillery and light arms to offer formidable resistance to any land attack but, with only a handful of warplanes, virtually no anti-aircraft equipment and only a half dozen warships, could not withstand a large-scale invasion.

The population of 26,000,000 natives normally is submissive to French rule, informed sources say. However, heavy air bombing would shatter morale and give agitators, already in touch with the Japanese, an opportunity to foment dangerous anti-French feeling.

Interest in De Gaulle

Chinese representatives here declare Chungking will fulfill its announced determination to move Chinese armies across the French colonial frontier as soon as Japanese forces cross it, no matter under what pretext.

The French consensus is that the colonial administration has maintained its connection with the Vichy government because of its financial support and the hope that French leaders there could prevail on Germany to mitigate Japan's ambitions.

Vichy's inability to deter the Japanese has strengthened popular interest in Gen. Charles de Gaulle, leader of Frenchmen still fighting with Britain. So far, however, lack of organization has prevented formation of a movement able to sway decisions of the Vichy-appointed administration.

British Gunners Bag Bomber—Falls at Depot

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

END OF A DORNIER—Air-raid wardens pl ay stream of water on a Dornier bomber shot out of the clouds during Sunday's raid on Lo ndon in which British asserted they bagged 185 German planes. The plane fell in fron t of Victoria Station. (Photo cabled yesterday from the British capital.)

planes, a combination dive and horizontal bomber.

Goering is reported to have been accompanied by only two Messerschmitt pursuiters, one flying on each side of his bomber.

Goering is said to have been greatly impressed by what he observed of bombarded London, and to have declared:

"I am glad I made my air force a strong weapon. It decidedly contributed to success in Poland, Norway, Belgium, Holland and France, and it also in England will be the sharp sword which will in a large way contribute to the decision."

Goering, who at 21 joined the German air force in 1914 as an observer, rose by 1918 to a position of such prominence that he took over the command of the Richthofen squadron after the famous Baron von Richthofen was shot down, is said to be directing not only the attacks against the enemy, but also the defense against British air raids on the Reich and Reich-occupied territory.

Goering's flight shared Nazi interest with what is viewed by official circles of Berlin as a highly important "friendly visit of state," by Serrano Suner, the Spanish minister of the interior and brother-in-law of Generalissimo Francisco Franco.

The Spanish guest arrived today and immediately had a lengthy conversation with Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop and tomorrow forenoon will be received by the Fuehrer.

Particular importance is attached to Suner's visit in informed quarters here because, it is said "it coincides with the approaching zenith of the military activities of the Axis powers with Great Britain." Coming at this time, it is added, this first highly official visit of an intimate collaboration with Franco in the Reich's capital is suggestive of a closer cooperation between the European pivots of the Axis and the government in Madrid.

It is expected moreover that the visit may produce something concrete in the nature of three-cornered consultations between Spain, the Reich and Italy—even an accord.

[London sources well versed in Spanish politics told the Associated Press the Minister's trip to Berlin to be highly significant in view of Italian pressure on Spain to permit passage of Axis forces across Spanish territory for an attack on British-held Gibraltar. These informants predicted an imminent shake-up in the Madrid government.]

Not only a deepening of German-Spanish relations can be awaited from this visit, informed quarters declare, but, they add, "through it, work of the new European order may be influenced."

Both Germany and Italy, declares the authoritative Deutsche Diplomatische Politische Korrespondenz, "entertain no other desire but that the efforts of Spain to regain both its inner and outer strength may be fulfilled." The Foreign Office organ continues "The axis powers are of the opinion that this Spain is indispensable for a regenerated continent."

With its material and spiritual forces, this organ adds, "an outstanding place awaits Franco's country in the European peoples' community."

British contentions, meanwhile, that they yesterday shot down 185 German planes were declared here to be fantastic.

The Speakership

Sam Rayburn has been elected to what was once the second most powerful position in the United States. Unquestionably he was the logical choice for the Speakership. Under Speaker Bankhead, whom he succeeds, Mr. Rayburn proved himself to be a loyal and effective majority leader. He is first and last a party man. His elevation to the Speakership is entirely in keeping with the position that office has come to occupy in the American system of government.

It is a matter of common knowledge that the Speaker no longer wields the power over legislation that once was his. In recent years Speakers have come and gone without vitally affecting the trends of national policy. Their tasks have been very different from those performed by Joseph G. Cannon or even Champ Clark, Frederick H. Gillette and Nicholas Longworth.

Speaker Longworth was succeeded by John Nance Garner. Since Mr. Garner became Vice President in 1933 the House has had four Speakers, Henry T. Rainey, Joseph W. Byrns, William B. Bankhead and now Mr. Rayburn. The names of some of the recent Speakers are less well known than those of Messrs. Cannon and Clark, who served about 30 and 20 years ago, respectively. In part that may be due to the short terms during which most of the recent Speakers have presided over the House. But in very large measure it results from a change in the nature of the office.

The major reforms in the legislative procedure of the House were effected in 1910-11. The Speaker's iron-fisted control over House committees was broken, he was ousted from membership on the Rules Committee and his arbitrary powers of recognizing members wishing to be heard on the floor were restricted. Speakers continued to exercise strong leadership in the House, but they no longer held dictatorial powers over the membership.

In recent years Speakers have lost much of this personal leadership, which they are still theoretically able to attain. Actual control over the House has passed from its presiding officer to the White House. President Roosevelt has been the chief policy-making official. Speakers have functioned chiefly as party wheelhorses to bring about the passage of measures favored by the Administration.

An effective working relationship between the President and Congressional leaders is highly desirable. There can be little doubt, however, that under the present Administration the pendulum has swung too far in the direction of executive control. The Speakership will not again become the great office it was, even after the procedure of the House had been democratized, until that body again assumes more responsibility for the formulation of national policy.

The Highest Courage

Out of bomb-scarred London comes one of the war's greatest stories of heroism, a story that will be often repeated in England's future history books. Daring in the face of enemy fire is a splendid quality, but it is clearly overshadowed by the cool courage of those who saved St. Paul's Cathedral. For four days and nights they worked in the presence of an engine of death which might blow them to bits at any moment.

Their enemy was a time bomb. Impersonal though the battle was, grim diversions were not lacking. As the workers began tunneling to their quarry they discovered its impact had broken a gas main. Three diggers were overcome. Then the gas caught fire, and the bomb grew warm in its burrow.

The workers put out the flames and returned to their task. In three days they had tunneled 17½ feet. They hitched ropes to the polished, 8-foot missile and hauled it to the surface. It slipped and plunged back. In that second every man expected death.

The bomb did not explode. Again they pulled it up, and again it fell. At the third attempt two automobiles in tandem extracted it. The shiny sides were studded with dangerous-looking fuses.

The heroes loaded the bomb on a truck, and their leader, Lieut. Davies, of the Royal Canadian Engineers, drove it to the Hackney marshes. Detonated there, it tore a 100-foot crater in the earth.

Surely there is no higher type of bravery than these men exercised. For theirs is the courage of the will, not of instinct. Such men do not surrender so long as their cause is worth defending.

Mr. Willkie's Crusade

Wendell L. Willkie struck vigorously at the Roosevelt Administration in the opening political address of his campaign at Coffeyville, Kans., yesterday. It was a fighting speech in which he pulled no punches. The Republican candidate left no doubt whatever that he intends to challenge the President's bid for a third term at the point where it is weakest.

In some instances partisanship was carried too far. Mr. Willkie's challenge was weakest when he made the flat statement that if the Administration is returned to power "you will be serving under an American totalitarian government before the long third term is finished." It is not necessary to make such dire and positive predictions to stress the dangers inherent in granting more and more power to an executive seeking to remain in office beyond the traditional eight-year limit.

Mr. Willkie was careless, too, in assuming that President Roosevelt, "in seven years of accumulating power, could not make one man a job." Undoubtedly he was thinking of the failure of the Administration to solve the unemployment problem. On that score the New Deal is wide open to criticism. But it has made an enormous number of jobs in Washington and elsewhere. One of its serious mistakes is that it has created too many political jobs while doing little to get men back to work in more productive enterprises.

But Mr. Willkie's grave challenges stand out far above any weaknesses in details of his speech. He accuses the Administration of failure to strengthen democracy throughout the world and of straining our own democratic institutions "to the breaking point." The first of these theses is certainly sustained by the reckless way in which the President broke up the London Economic Conference in 1933. On the other hand, the Administration has more recently fostered liberal trade policies and extended substantial aid to the democracies of Europe in their fight against totalitarianism.

As to the second thesis, there is no question that President Roosevelt has employed many undemocratic means to attain his ends. The purge, the attack upon the Supreme Court and the frequent use of subterfuges are wholly out of keeping with the spirit of democratic government. On many occasions the President has been less than frank with the American people. Mr. Willkie's protest against these attempts to treat voters "like gullible children" may well strike a responsive chord.

Yet his chief complaint is that the Roosevelt Administration is incompetent to mobilize the national strength which the United States will need in the next four critical years. Mr. Willkie assumes that the Administration, if granted a third term, would fail to achieve adequate defense, as it has failed to bring about economic recovery. And that failure, he fears, would lead to further centralization of power, collectivization of industry and consequent loss of human liberties.

No realist can dismiss that grave possibility. Mr. Willkie did not make the mistake of assuming that President Roosevelt wants to destroy democracy. He fears only that the policies now being followed will inevitably lead to that result. With dangers threatening from the outside, the Nation must attain new strength. So the issue of the campaign, as Mr. Willkie sees it, is whether that strength will be attained by more centralization of economic power or by revitalization of private enterprise.

New National Policy

Immediately after signing the Burke-Wadsworth bill President Roosevelt issued a proclamation fixing October 16 as the date of registration for all men between the ages of 21 and 35. In doing so he acted with the promptness which the situation demands. Compulsory training for military service is now our national policy.

Because of the world crisis, which has set in motion forces of a magnitude and ferocity never before witnessed, the United States must acquire the most powerful naval and military defense system it has ever possessed. We can no longer depend on the voluntary method to build up our armed forces. So it is important that the whole Nation cheerfully accept the selective service system. After all, it is the fairest method by which an army of the size we need can be recruited.

In a statement accompanying his proclamation President Roosevelt did well to recall the generally forgotten fact that the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 does not "carve a new and uncharted trail in the history of our democratic institutions." On the contrary, he points out, the obligation of military service incumbent upon every free man "was an accepted institution in colonial days." Thus, at the time of the adoption of the Federal Constitution, "9 of the 13 States explicitly provided for universal service in their basic laws."

Even if this historic precedent were lacking, a selective service system of the kind which has now been established by law would be a necessity. For the tornado of aggression which has been let loose in the world will spare only the strong. "A few weeks," as the President said in his proclamation, "have seen great nations fall. We cannot remain indifferent to the philosophy of force now rampant in the world. The terrible fate of nations whose weakness invited attack is too well known to us all."

To be strong we need a far greater abundance of arms than we possess at the moment. These arms are beginning to be provided. We also need men, and the selective service system will provide them in a fair and equitable manner.

Invasion Delayed

For ten successive days London has been subjected to a fierce aerial attack which has resulted in thousands of casualties and the destruction of innumerable homes, factories, docks, gas tanks, waterworks and other military and non-military objectives.

Even at this distance the assault on the British metropolis appears terrifying. What it has meant to the 8,500,000 inhabitants of that city can only be imagined. Yet every report from impartial observers bears witness to the magnificent courage and fortitude with which the Londoners have stood up under the attack.

Nor is there any evidence that the destruction which the German air force has succeeded in bringing about during these ten days has won for the Reich mastery of the air over Britain. It is significant that during the raids of Sunday the R. A. F. claimed to have shot down 185 enemy raiders, one out of every three that crossed the Channel to take part in the bombardment.

There is no way of checking the accuracy of this report. But it does appear that Germany is paying a terrific price for the damage she is doing to Great Britain. Moreover, the approach of bad weather makes it peremptory for Hitler to invade the British Isles during the near future if he is ever to invade them at all.

It cannot be assumed that bad weather will give the British any real respite from the assaults which now make a nightmare of their days and nights. On Monday the R. A. F. carried out raids on German-held centers on the continent, despite a terrific electrical storm raging at the time. Rain and fog will not keep the German planes from dropping their destructive loads on British cities. Bad weather may, in fact, help them by making it more difficult for antiaircraft and R. A. F. fighters to operate.

Yet bad weather plus German failure to control the air over Great Britain may force an indefinite postponement of Hitler's invasion plan. Speed and precision are indispensable to that project. With the tides unfavorable, with the Channel stormy and turbulent, the dispatch of a large expeditionary force from German-held ports might end in disaster.

In the meantime the British are taking no chances. Warned by Winston Churchill that an invasion may be imminent, defense preparations have been speeded up and the R. A. F. has carried out nightly raids on barge concentrations, oil depots, harbor works and docks in the Dutch, Belgian and French ports. These raids appear to have been very destructive.

It is still an open question whether the damage has been sufficient to put a permanent crimp in Hitler's plans. The long-threatened invasion of England is a diminishing possibility. But it remains a very real possibility just the same.

Glenn Frank

The tragic death of Dr. Glenn Frank brings to an untimely end a political career that was as potentially promising as it was lamentably brief.

Until his appointment as chairman of the Republican Program Committee in December, 1937, Dr. Frank had never taken an active part in politics. "I'm a Republican by ancestry and inertia," he once said. His life, up to then, had been absorbed by other activities.

A writer and lecturer of note, he was from 1921 to 1925 editor of the Century Magazine. For the next 12 years he served as president of the University of Wisconsin, a post which ultimately made him the storm center of a violent political controversy. There appears to be little doubt that politics played a significant part in his removal.

It was probably this circumstance which led him to accept the offer of the Republican National Committee to head a group organized to survey the whole field of foreign and domestic policy with the object of working out a party program that would appeal to the Nation. The report of this committee was published last February and proved to be a thoughtful and statesmanlike middle-of-the-road document.

Dr. Frank was killed by an automobile accident while he was en route to a political meeting. He was a candidate for the Republican Senatorial nomination in Wisconsin. It was his first bid for an elective office, a fact which further emphasizes the untimely nature of his death.

Foot Washing

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Brown's communication on "Foot Washing" in The Post of September 13 was of special interest to me because of the fact that I came across the practice some years ago in a rare book in my library, published in the year 1699.

The book is entitled (in part), "God's Protecting Providence, Man's Surest Help and Defense," etc. It was written and published by Jonathan Dickenson, an Englishman who, with his wife and baby and 25 others (including passengers, crew, and several slaves), were shipwrecked on the east coast of Florida in 1696.

They were captured by several hundred savages, who were naked except for a breechcloth made from pleated palm, and forced to accompany them to their town, 5 miles away. Dickenson says: "We were directed to the cassekey's (chief's) house, which was large and filled with Indians, and then ordered to sit down. The old cassekey fetched some water and washed one of the passenger's feet and my wife's."

All that kept them from being murdered was that Dickenson claimed that they were Spaniards, whom the savages feared. The author relates how they were finally delivered "from the cruel devouring jaws of the inhuman cannibals of Florida." The castaways were released after weeks of hardship and at last reached St. Augustine in a famished condition.

It would be interesting to learn when and how these savages came to practice this ancient custom.

Our Fatalism

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Everywhere, on the streets, on the radio, and notably in the writings of the columnists, the individual has adopted, perhaps unconsciously, a feeling of fatalism in regard to the great struggle going on across the narrow Atlantic. He views with resignation the laws being made or contemplated, the actions and words of his leaders, his President, Senators and ambassadors.

The mind is confused as to whether they, as himself, are victims of flawless propaganda, or whether they are speaking truths, based on experience, first-hand information, and figures. He fears that if he allows himself to ride with the contemporary current of opinion, he may be giving his country into the hands of a fellow-empire, which claims to be fighting for all believers in liberty and the pursuit of happiness, but which may, in the end, prove to be a mercenary party looking for a friend during the probable last hours of its magnificent history.

Then, again, there lies in the back of his confused mind the realization that, if he turns his back to the pleas of this last European stronghold of justice, which may prove to be sincere when it is too late, he may be creating the beginning of his own end. It is this thought that has caused America's people to drift into a melancholy feeling of fatalism and inevitableness.

"Whatever is, must be."

Europe's Food

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The New York Times, September 9, says that the German government has made formal demand upon the French government in Vichy for a substantial part of the food and raw materials in unoccupied France and for any such products that France may be able to import in the future, according to "reliable" diplomatic reports reaching Washington. Berlin is said to be demanding 58 per cent of these products from the Petain regime.

The New York Times, September 9, says that Dr. Joseph Stokes, jr., representative of the American Friends Service Committee, who arrived in New York Monday, pictured the grave danger of famine in unoccupied France this winter and asserted that the children of the area were already beginning to show signs of malnutrition.

The fact that Hitler demands—and takes—58 per cent of foodstuffs badly needed in France indicates the extent to which the German war machine will go this winter to get feed. At the same time plenty of noise will be made here in an effort to get us to send foodstuffs to France.

The Associated Press, September 6, says that the agricultural section of the German military administration has forecast a shortage of foodstuffs in occupied France, which can be met only with strict rationing this winter.

From Berlin, September 9, the New York Times reports that the Germans have announced that an agreement has been reached with Rumania by which the nation's entire surplus grain supply will be exported to the Reich this year at a fixed price.

Indicating that Germany (as now is the situation in Denmark and Norway) is confiscating foodstuffs in each country over which her machine has ridden with murderous tread, the following news dispatch interests those American opposed to feeding that war machine:

The C. T. P. S. reports from Berlin, September 9, that Belgian farmers must turn their potato crops over to the authorities, (Hitler controlled) with the exception of an allowance for themselves, their livestock, and for planting. The farmers are to be permitted to keep enough of their potatoes to give each member of the household a pound and a half daily.

The above five examples are but a few of the many evidences read in press and heard over radio showing why the civilian population of defeated-subjected nations are in need of foodstuffs.

Complete Defense

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I bring to your attention the words of Washington spoken in a day of crisis no more searching than that with which we are confronted today? They are:

"I cannot recommend to your notice measures for the fulfillment of our duties to the rest of the world without again pressing upon you the necessity of placing ourselves in a condition of complete defense."

Some mothers, not many, I think, are saying today, "I did not raise my son to be a soldier." Unwittingly they may be raising them to be serfs. Looking at Czecho-Slovakia, Poland and Bessarabia, would that not seem to be the only alternative that is presented by the new world governance which is preached in Berlin, Moscow and Tokyo and practiced in the unfortunate submerged countries that put their trust in treaties and in covenants?

Mr. Willkie And The New Republic

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I trespass on your space to comment on the New Republic's recent lengthy attack on Mr. Wendell Willkie?

The editors of a serious journal of opinion should turn out work that informed readers will respect. It is therefore surprising to find in the New Republic's special supplement misconceptions about the utility industry so gross that one must question the qualifications of the authors to deal with their subject.

I am a public utility engineer, but all of my experience in the industry has been with utilities in Great Britain. While I am not intimate with the details of Mr. Willkie's career, as an American citizen I have followed the evolution of the public utility issue in the United States. My experience in the industry, combined with my detachment from the recent controversies in America, places me in an advantageous position to comment on such a dissertation as that of the New Republic.

1. The editors of the New Republic, alleging serious "write-ups" in the value of Commonwealth & Southern properties on the ledgers of the parent company, state that such write-ups are a "fraud against the public" because "the valuation of a utility is the base on which its rates are set (so that it may earn a 'fair' return on its investment). Clearly, if its value is written up, its rates will be 'inflated.'"

Of course, everybody must know that the various State public utility commissions have jurisdiction over utility rates. The fact is that no utility commission in the United States and no court ever accepts or even considers ledger valuations of an operating company in fixing the rate base, much less the ledger valuations on the books of a parent holding company. Rates are based on physical valuation, generally nowadays on an original cost basis, although replacement cost may be occasionally a factor.

2. The editors speak of "the well-established fact that taxes are a minor element in cost and can have little effect on rates." This "minor element" amounts on the average to about 15 per cent of the gross revenues or about 33 per cent of operating costs for private utilities throughout the United States. Here in New York Consolidated Edison is currently paying in taxes more than 24 cents out of every dollar that it takes in. Taxes are not only a major element in a private utility's costs—they are one that is forever rising.

The New Republic's attack on Mr. Willkie is congested with questionable assertions, to deal with which you lack space and I time. If a political writer were to produce a study of American politics in which he blandly declared that the President's term of office was six years, instead of four, such a howler would reveal his incompetence and discredit him completely. The blunders in the New Republic's special supplement are every whit as bad. But the public is not so well informed about the elementary facts of the utility industry, and thus it comes about that many good people may be impressed by an attack on the public utility record of Mr. Willkie which any informed person will dismiss as worthless.

The Decline

AMONG THE STARTLING changes observable in the Year of Our Lord, 1940, quite evident is the decline of conversation. At social gatherings we hear strident babblings; over the radio costly time is frequently filled with condensed talk the words of which pile up almost as rapidly as bullets from a machine gun.

The fact is that, except as a formalized proceeding, or as series of impulsive reactions with neither thought nor good maners back of them, the humane and stimulating art of conversation hardly survives today.

We cannot return to the content and exact procedures of the masters of conversation of the past—Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, Jesus, Abelard, Samuel Johnson—but modern examples of conversation even between contemporary celebrities, suffer by comparison.

Among the better examples still to be found are the well-organized conferences of business and professional men. Such conferences, some of which are being conducted by telephonic connections simultaneously covering a wide area of country, are useful in making plans, reconciling differences, pooling ideas.

Not a few of our public men, strong on the platform, are known to be lamentably weak in conferences with a dozen associates. They may want to talk, not listen; or they are intolerant; or they lose tempers. Conduct of executives in a conference is in itself an art.

Crippling influences today affecting social conversation are such as these habits of self-absorption and inattention, fatigue, excitement, radio programs, movies, automobiles, and the potent sense of isolation we develop by living amid the crowded populations of cities. There are, of course, psychopathic and border-line mental conditions engendered by the stresses of life, which tend to make normal conversation impossible. Health, leisure, information, with kindly feeling, ability to listen as well as to express oneself clearly and pleasurably, are conducive to good conversation.

The varieties of human pests who are destroying conversation as a delightful art are numerous and are difficult to classify.

Malicious gossips need no description. It is becoming a fashion for some pseudo-psychologists to defend the gossip-habit on the plea that we purge our own souls of meanness when we talk about other persons and project or attribute to them the evil deep in our own being. This is a coddling of psychopaths.

Nit-wits are those who use big words foolishly, make pronouncements about things of which they know little, or else talk endlessly to anyone who will listen.

Know-alls are to be found among both the self-made and the lucky men and women, some of whom spurn university graduates but most of whom secretly yearn for an academic degree. They are also found among recent college graduates.

Experts—variety, amateur or self-styled—endeavor to settle promptly the conversational controversies of their friends or associates.

Interrupters like to change, stop, discolor any coherent statement before it is finished. They love to set us right about minor, irrelevant details. They grab the floor whenever they can and dearly love to be in the spot light even of a bored but polite attention.

The egocentric begin with the word "I" every story, or statement of fact and principle. A statistical accounting of the relative number of sentences beginning with "I," in the course of a hubbub of general conversation might be astonishing.

Patternists are akin to the egocentrics. All they say conforms to a little circle of ideas. These concern principally their own ailments, operations, sure-cures, family, cult, travel, or the unavoidable woe of all things present and to come.

Silent members of a group are of different motivations. Their silence during general conversation may be due variously to ignorance, timidity, sulkiness, cynicism, or sheer good sense. Grover Cleveland, it is said, wisely used "the trick of silence."

It would be naive to assume that any one remedy might be relied upon to rescue social conversation from its present low estate; or that any adequate cure is available.

If we wish, each one of us could see to it that he or she would not remain or become a gossip, nit-wit, know-all, amateur expert, chronic interrupter, egocentric, patternist, or a person stupidly silent.

All of us might also resist the influences which tend to destroy social conversation—among them, selfish inattention to what interests other persons, ant-like activity and excitement over trifles, indifference to stirring current events, lazy ignorance, sheer bad maners.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Reasoned Courage Of The British

THE AWE-INSPIRING courage of the British people could not be sustained if along with their brave hearts they did not also have clear heads. They fight on, and they are determined to fight back, not in the manner of men resisting blindly, but as men who know the position, and the odds, and the real alternative. Only a great people could do this. The British are a great people. They have organized the largest security that the world has known since the Romans, and with all their mistakes they have extended more widely the area of law and order than it was ever before extended on earth. This great history is in them now, and now at last they are greatly led by a man who knows their history; and having the quality of greatness and being greatly led, their reason does not undermine but, on the contrary, strengthens the courage of their hearts. They see clearly. As long as they see clearly, they will not be intimidated or demoralized.

What they see so clearly is not only that if they resist they will eventually win but that if they do not resist, they are utterly and absolutely lost. They know that if they do not resist to the uttermost in the British Isles, and that, were they defeated there, if they do not resist in their Empire, they will be disarmed and helpless, perhaps forever. So they resist at home, knowing that if ever they were conquered in the British Isles, their fleet and their air force and their commercial power in the outer world will continue to protect them against enslavement and destruction. The essence of their courage is the knowledge that Britain cannot be defeated in Britain alone, that the lot of the people of Britain can never be hopeless as long as the Empire and the fleet remain in being.

THIS IS the great lesson taught by the tragic experience of France. The French people were poorly led and in the crisis of June the men who came to power lost their heads as they lost their courage. They made the terrible mistake of thinking that they could ingratiate themselves with the victors by rendering themselves completely helpless. So they surrendered not merely France which was overrun but the Empire, which was intact, and the fleet and the air force as well. They surrendered also their moral position by the unprecedented folly of hastening to fasten upon themselves the guilt for the war and to exonerate their conquerors. They were misled into believing that the more impotent they were, the better terms they would receive. No greater error was ever committed by an intelligent people. Had they followed the advice of Gen. De Gaulle, continued their resistance from Africa and Asia Minor and on the seas, they would at the very least have had some power with which to negotiate with the Germans and Italians. But, instead, they threw in their hand before they had played it out. And since in the world as it is today there is no chivalry and no mercy, the more helpless they are, the worse they will be treated.

Indeed, what protects the French today from the same systematic destruction which has been visited upon the Poles is not Hitler's magnanimity toward Marshal Petain or his admiration for M. Laval, but simply and solely the power of the British resistance. There can be few Frenchmen left who do not realize this. Certainly, Churchill realizes it and the great majority of the British people will realize it as long as they are nobly led. That is why the pledge they have taken not to surrender even if they are defeated in Britain, if not absolute, is as real and valid as any pledge can be that is made by mortal men. For whereas the Vichy government in France is still protected by the British resistance, once Britain surrendered the Empire and the fleet because the British spirit was broken in London, there would be no outside power left to check the victors and to moderate their purposes.

THE IMMEDIATE question is whether Hitler can win the Battle of Britain. But the greater question is whether, even if he did win it, his victory would be the decisive battle. If it were decisive, then there would fall with the British Isles that control of the seas by means of which free nations have for more than a century maintained their freedom. So the issue is immense, for it is no coincidence, but it is a profoundly significant truth, that the free nations of the world, the nations which have enjoyed and developed a regime of constitutional liberty, are established upon the shores of the ocean: The Scandinavians, the Dutch, the Belgians, the British, the French and the Americans. In the interior of the continent of Europe where it merges into Asia military power and not naval power is supreme; and in the landlocked interior, away from the liberating seas, constitutional government has not taken root and the new practice of liberty works feebly against the ancient habits of tyranny.

So the control of the seas by the free nations must not be yielded up if freedom itself is to survive. Whatever happens on the continent of Europe, the fleets which control the oceans must remain in being, must remain as the ultimate defense against the universal revolution, and the final counterpoise to the gigantic power of mechanized militarism. This is the conviction of the British people as they face their ordeal, and this has come to be the conviction of the American people and of all their responsible leaders as they watch the struggle on which so much depends. This conviction may be dulled now and then by partisanship and the trivialities of politics. But it will persist and, put to the test, it will prevail.

Tricky Politics

AS I LOOK at it, this Presidential election is one of those crossroads of destiny that the cartoonists draw, with George Spelvin, the average American, depicted as a puzzled little guy with question marks shooting out of his hat. Only this time I think we really are at the crossroads and that down yonder way, beyond a stretch bordered by social and political ice cream trees and dandy houses as far as the first bend, the road hooks off to a strange and ugly land with mountains of debt piled to the sky, like those elephant-colored Rockies in the West, and nothing but tin shacks in the valleys which are bare and deeply shadowed by the range.

Remembering how arrogantly the humble, hand-washing bleeding hearts of the New Deal spoke of their "mandate" after 1936, interpreting the election returns as popular permission to load the Supreme Court with political ringers and repudiate the rights of minorities and property, I apprehend that they will try to finish the job if they are given four years more. The people were not quite softened up for it this term, but they are head-weary now and, given four years more, the New Deal would really bang things around.

YOU DON'T HEAR so much about it now because it would be bad propaganda toward election time, but two years ago there was a lot of talk from over there on the left about the people's right to change their form of government any time. I think this talk would be revived soon after election if Mr. Roosevelt were returned to office with another of those "mandates" and that this time they would claim to have instructions from the people to make some change. They used to say they were just trying to make democracy work and I now take them at their word, but now I better understand what they mean by "democracy."

Most of us think it means freedom, but they have a mental reservation and they take advantage of the carelessness of our thinking. When they say "democracy" they have in mind the right of a majority to abrogate the rights of the minority and even to vote away its own rights by conferring a "mandate" or some ambiguous approval on a group who will then read false meanings into the returns, amounting, in their view, to a "mandate."

I DON'T TRUST tricky people and there is no denying that this Administration, from the President down, has been tricky all the way. I think one explanation of Wendell Willkie's ineffectiveness as a campaigner up to date, has been his adherence to the old rules of controversy. He has been playing Chamberlain to Mr. Roosevelt's Hitler and we all remember that Hitler made a terrible bum of Chamberlain by outsmarting the naive old man.

There are a lot of crooks in the social-democratic line-up now who think they are playing smart politics in throwing their gang strength to Mr. Roosevelt, but the greater their success the sorrier they will be in the long run. After election and for as long a time as he might need them Mr. Roosevelt would let them be, because a man with a "mandate" always has need of thieves, roughnecks and other incorrigibles to do his dirty work while he is organizing his own strength, but thanks in part to their own resourceful knavery, these hoodlum political leaders find themselves in the power of the Administration after election and the Department of Justice would be able to mash them as you would step on a bug. The Department of Justice never was as political as it is today but, given a "mandate," it would grow more so.

IN THIS CAMPAIGN we hear nothing of any surprises which the New Deal expects to break out after election if Mr. Roosevelt is returned. They never have revealed their surprises in campaign time. They get their "mandate" first and then reveal what they have in mind.

Over in Sweden or Norway a few years ago there was a strange, suicidal migration of a race of rodents which, on an instant notion, went hell-bent across country in a straight line in the manner of some tribes of ants which suddenly go nuts and go away from where they are, climbing all obstacles and losing themselves in floods until the survivors, if any, arrive at a certain spot. These Scandinavian rodents just kept on jamming without looking where they were going until the whole crazy pack of them hopped off a fjord into the sea.

Some people think maybe the sunspots are doing us dirt. It certainly is something.

Abitibi Assets To Go on Sale

Toronto, Sept. 16 (By Canadian Press).—Lawyers will talk in millions Friday when F. H. Barlow, K. C. Master of the Ontario Supreme Court, listens to argument on the fixing of a reserve bid for sale of the vast Abitibi Power & Paper Co.

One of the largest producers of pulp and paper in Canda, the company has been listed as having total assets of more than $121,000,000. Among those angling for the properties is a bondholders' protective committee who seek to recover on their investment. The company has been in receivership eight years.

After hearing argument, Mr. Barlow will determine on a reserve bid for the public sale ordered for October 16. After that date it will be possible for any individual or syndicate to put in an offer.

Military Vs. Civilian

By Mark Sullivan

Deep Significance Of U. S. Draft

PERSONS who read the draft law—probably very few—will find in an important part of it repetition of a certain word. The word is "civilian." For example:

"The President is authorized to . . . establish . . . civilian local boards and other civilian agencies. . . .

"No member of any such board shall be a member of the land or naval forces of the United States, but each member . . . shall be a civilian. . . .

"Appeal boards . . . shall be composed of civilians."

THIS EMPHASIS upon "civilian," this exclusion of members of the Army and Navy from the local agencies which select draftees, has deep-reaching significance. Its inclusion in the present act is in effect a duplication of the same provision in our wartime draft act of 1917. While the present act differs in detail from the 1917 one, the present one retains the distinction between civilian authority and military authority. The meaning of this difference was put in words, at the time of the 1917 act, by the writer of this column:

"Anyone who will read the draft bill closely, or will search his recollection of the details of registration and draft which we are just passing through, will discover this fact, a fact of the most fundamental importance, although utterly inconspicuous: At no point does a soldier come to a citizen and say 'Come'; at no point does a military authority say to a civilian, 'Come, you; take orders from me.' This is conscription in the odious sense, and this is the thing which doesn't happen in our case. The Administration wrote the bill and laid out the process so that at no place does the Army take a man from civil life; it is always civilians sending a man to the Army. What happens is that a group of civilians say to a man, 'We have examined the circumstances of all the persons in our community, and we designate you as one best fitted to go and serve us; that is, to to serve the civilian population as a soldier.' The board of civilians who make this designation are the local civil authorities . . . the neighbors of the men whom they now survey and designate—the neighbors of the men drafted. And if the drafted man does not agree that his designation was a proper one or believes that he should be exempted, he has a chance to lay his reasons before the fellow civilians who have designated him. Finally, if the local board still insists on his designation, he has an appeal, again to civilians. At all points, it is civilians choosing a man from among themselves and sending him to serve them in the Army. At no point is it a case of soldiers taking a man. The subordination of the Army to the civil population is maintained."

THOSE WORDS were written about the 1917 draft. They apply to the present draft as well.

The presence of that distinction in the draft act of 1917 was due largely to the initiative of a then Congressman from Nebraska, A. C. Shallenberger. Shallenberger had the instinct for American tradition which led him to see the fundamental difference between a civilian board and a military one. When Shallenberger pointed this out, and embodied it in the draft act, he readily got assent to it from the War Department and the Wilson Administration. Wilson was one who would be quick to see, and careful to preserve the American tradition which is watchful against military authority over civilians. It is the same tradition which says that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy should be chosen from civil life, not from the armed forces.

One feels like paying a tribute to A. C. Shallenberger. The work of a not nationally conspicuous Nebraskan, now dead and outside his State forgotten, lives after his hour in Congress. It lives to give vitality to an American tradition—in a day when some of our traditions are not universally respected; when the tradition against a third term is ignored by the President in office; when not only traditions but even principles are frequently questioned, sometimes even jeered at.

WHILE THE PRESENT draft act preserves a fundamental tradition of the 1917 one, the present act differs from the 1917 one in an even more important respect, a respect which makes the very existence of the present act a departure from a nation-long tradition. The 1917 draft act was passed only after we had declared war. The present act is passed in peacetime, and is the first peacetime draft in our history. To draft men in peacetime; to say to one man, "You must be a soldier," while saying to another, "You need not be a soldier"—that, no matter how wisely and justly done, is a formidable assertion of the power of government over the individual.

If we seek justification for the departure from tradition, we shall find some in the fact that today the formal act of declaring war has not the standing it once had.

Since aggressive nations make war first, and declare it afterward or not at all, it follows that nations on the defensive cannot hold themselves to declaring war before they take defensive measures. To us, in the world as it is, there is little difference between conscription today, and conscription after war had been made against us, or war declared by us.

Private Builders Are Urged to Act On Defense Needs

New York, Sept. 16 (AP).—Private industry must act immediately to avoid the delays and mistakes that seriously crippled America's war effort in 1917-18, according to the first section of a survey on housing released today by the Twentieth Century Fund.

The fund is a research agency financed by the late Edward A. Filene, Boston merchant.

Reviewing conditions at the time of the last World War, the survey, prepared under the direction of Miles L. Colean, added:

"Only in a comparatively few places did the ordinary processes of supplying houses break down sufficiently to create a necessity for direct governmental operation.

"Even in the most intense year of war activity, however, and after the governmental housing agencies had been set up, over 90 per cent of the total 200,000 dwelling units started represented private operations.

"The experience of the last war, as well as these first warning signals from the present emergency, show clearly that the vital work of providing adequate shelter for the workers in defense industries must parallel, and not lag behind, the expansion of those industries."

Freight Handlings Of B. & O. Increase

Books And Things

By Lewis Gannett

A French Hemingway

TO READ Henry de Montherlant's very Gallic, very witty, very sex-conscious "Costals and the Hippogriff" (Knopf, $2.75) is to be taken back to a period when the only thing that came out of Vichy was its water, when Pierre Laval reminded one of Willie Howard, when the naughty foreword to "Ninotchka" suggested a brilliant summation of the French national character, and the Maginot Line did not look as forlorn as the Great Wall of China. It is to be taken to a period when in the argosy of the world's humor all Frenchmen made love like gods, and pretty often, while a view of the Eiffel Tower in any American film sent a ripple of delight down the world's backbone, and a million hearts crooned together before vistas of love, spring, and "La Vie Parisienne." At this dreary moment, to be brief about it, "Costals and the Hippogriff" sounds as old as "The Canterbury Tales." It is almost as delightful.

De Montherlant is exactly Ernest Hemingway's age, and his extra-literary pursuits in the war and the bullring bear a certain resemblance to our Ernest's. While his work has not the tight, calculating tragic sense of Hemingway's, the sleight-of-hand style the dumb-ox heroes perpetually being led to the slaughter, it belongs to the same order of belief and rests on the same fashionable nihilism. De Montherlant's conception of life is—not so deceptively—frivolous, and superficially he is very much the boulevard novelist—keen, very knowing, light on his feet, seemingly very indifferent to his work. But that is his craft and the secret of his hilarity; he likes to bob up and down like a cork, to give the impression of a dizzy frivolity under which the novel seems to disintegrate a dozen times before your eyes. He likes to ad lib, to play alternately the funny desperado, the cool, lazy mind, to sacrifice the boiling point of a scene for some sly but poignant bon mot; but his languor and energetic recklessness, while half his charm, never obscure his crafty sense of line and his feeling for effect.

I do not mean that De Montherlant is secretly a profound fellow: there is very little in his novel that does not immediately meet the eye. But like so many in his war-riddled generation, De Montherlant's seriousness consists in not taking himself seriously, while his vigor and charm as an artist consist in not taking the novel seriously. Hence he writes of love, which remains the supreme comedy; hence he writes of it in a spirit of mockery so complicated that he mocks himself for writing of love, mocks his hero, mocks those who suffer by love, even as he mocks those too coarse to understand that one can suffer by love, or those who have never had any love to suffer. Hence the jollity of "Costals and the Hippogriff" and its outlandishness, its volubility and its point: there are times when one may not know who is talking to whom, but how clearly one always hears what is being said!

THE HERO is, of course, a fashionable novelist and a notorious Don Juan. He has a son by an early marriage, money, a reputation, a host of devoted followers, and an extraordinary talent for pursuing several affairs simultaneously. Pierre Costals has been happy enough, though too many of his affairs have been elaborate rationalizations of his war experiences. Then, one afternoon, he meets a shy, conventional, rather stupid debutante named Solange Dandillot, proceeds at his usual tempo, and discovers too late that they are at the point of marriage. Pierre, of course, does not want to marry, he has a horror of marriage. It is not that he must marry Solange, for the lady is perfectly willing, with Mama's permission, to be his mistress, and is; but Mama, though crafty and French, also wants the marriage. Pierre is at his wits end: he cannot live with Solange, who talks marriage, marriage all day long; he cannot live without her; but he cannot dream of marrying her.

He tries to reason with Solange and Mama; he reads them the unhappy diaries of Count and Countess Tolstoy and enforces their lesson; a novelist should never marry! They remain inflexible. He proposes to Solange a dozen times, revokes his proposals, reluctantly considers marriage if she will grant him a divorce at any time upon the slightest demand. Solange consents, even signs a letter dictated by Pierre testifying to a fictitious adultery which he can use against her later. And at the last minute he flees to Genoa.

There, amid fair company, Pierre longs for Solange and wires her to come, but adds: "Bring diaries Count and Countess Tolstoy." He proposes for the nth time; she consents; and he runs to a solicitor with a trumped-up story of a character in some play he is supposed to be writing: "Dear M. Solicitor, how can I get this wretch of mine divorced if his wife, let us say, is unwilling?" The answer being doubtful, he flees to Morocco, works himself sick to forget Solange, then becomes hysterically afraid when informed he may have caught leprosy from a native mistress. Back to Paris, where he nobly tells Solange that now he cannot, must not, marry her. And so on, for, though Pierre has not caught leprosy, it makes a wonderful excuse. As De Montherlant says in one scene: "They went on hooting together for a while longer, but that's enough about them. In any case, whether or no there is a mystery about women, there is a mystery about men. The mystery about men is that women can love them."

Economy Of Free Philippines

Manila.

WHILE THE FILIPINOS are debating the dictatorial powers of the President and his proposal to liquidate political parties, the economy of the Commonwealth government is fast swinging to the left.

With the sugar excise tax refund from America, which amounts to some $25,000,000 a year, the government is organizing state corporations in many fields of industry. Meanwhile, consumers-producers cooperatives are being organized under the auspices of one such firm, the National Trading Corporation. In private and official conversations, President Quezon has made no secret of his scheme to set up a system of state socialism.

The economic readjustment of the Philippines is compulsory under the Independence Act of Congress. The act requires that by 1946, Philippine exports shall lose all preferences in the American market. While on the surface this requirement may be routine, it is in truth so revolutionary that it implies the almost complete overhauling of the present Philippine industrial setup.

From 1912 to the present, Philippine industry as a whole has been geared to the tariff-protected American market on a special free-trade basis. This has resulted in the growth of industries that produce articles in demand in the United States at a cost basis too high for the Philippines or the Orient but still profitable when their output is marketed in America. As a corollary, industries whose products are not in demand in America have been neglected. The loss of the American market, therefore, means that the Philippines must start economically from scratch.

BENITO RAZON, president of the National Trading Corporation and one of the closest economic advisers of President Quezon, admitted this when he said in a public speech recently, "It is not within our power to establish new channels for our trade after 1946; nor can we foretell whether or not any preference will govern our trade relations with the United States after that year." Thus the new Philippine economy, when it is evolved, may even be farther from the orthodox democratic capitalistic economy than Philippine democracy will be from traditional democracy.

It is true, of course, that the Philippine government started going into business under the Wilson Administration by opening a bank, organizing a cement company, and acquiring a railroad. But under the Commonwealth, this activity is being greatly expanded. To date, there are eight government corporations with an annual budget bigger than that of the government itself. And President Quezon has already intimated that a separate executive department, under a full-fledged cabinet member, may soon be set up to administer the state's businesses.

Razon's bible is a book written by the late Dr. Frederick Howe of Princeton University on the cooperatives of Denmark in which the savant develops the theory that the cooperative is the answer of democracy to both fascism and communism. In many ways cooperatives will dovetail with the President's desire to curtail property rights. Although so far he has refused to explain what he means by such a curtailment, saying that it will take him years to do so, he has intimated that his economic ideal is one in which the government owned the means of production.

HOW DIFFERENT Quezon's state socialism from Hitler's National Socialism will be, if it will be different, it is hard to foretell. But the President has enunciated the policy that the Filipinos should think for themselves or bust. Although it may be said that the ten-year period of the Commonwealth, which in fact is a period of trial, should not be a period of political and economic experimentation, the circumstances of separation from America, such as the abolition of the free trade, leave the Filipinos without alternative in some cases.

But the compulsion to think and to try may bear some unintended fruits. It may eventually lead the Filipinos to think far back from the very beginning of Philippine-American relations, thus reconsidering the entire philosophy of independence. It is the fear to look back that makes them blind separatists. Once they look back, by compulsion, they may get to really comparing the past and the present under America's protecting wings with the future away and beyond them.

DAUGHTERS OF THE SPEAKER, MRS. EUGENIA B. HOYT AND TALLULAH BANKHEAD (RIGHT), THE ACTRESS, ARRIVING AT THE CAPITOL

Capital Mourns Statesman's Passing

By James D. Secrest

A special train bearing the body of the late Speaker, William B. Bankhead left Union Station at 5 p. m. yesterday en route to Jasper, Ala., where burial rites will be conducted at 2:30 p. m. today at the First Methodist Church. It was accompanied by a large delegation of legislators and by President Roosevelt and Administration officials.

All day yesterday the Capitol was in mourning for the stern-faced Alabama statesman who had labored there for 23 years and had risen to one of the highest offices. Flags were at half mast. Legislative work was at a standstill and members were heavy at heart in the loss of a friend.

For several hours preceding a joint service of the House and Senate, the casket of the 66-year-old legislator rested under a mountain of floral wreaths in the well of the House. A Capitol policeman stood motionless at either end.

The House, which was stunned by the death of its Speaker early Sunday morning, stood in recess at 12:30 when President Roosevelt, members of his Cabinet, and the Diplomatic Corps filed into the chamber. Justice McReynolds represented the Supreme Court. Following them came Mrs. Bankhead, her grief hidden by a veil ,and the Speaker's two daughters, Tallulah and Mrs. Eugenia Hoyt, both dressed in black. Two brothers, Senator John H. Bankhead 2d, and Col. Henry Bankhead, commercial attache at Ottawa, Canada, and other relatives completed the group.

The sentiments of most members of the House were expressed by Representative Sam Rayburn, of Texas, who a short while before had been elected Speaker in a solemn ceremony. Coming down from the rostrum, where he sat with president pro-tem of the Senate, Senator Pittman (Democrat), of Nevada, Rayburn addressed the assembly:

"For 25 years or more I was given a rich friendship, one I shall remember to my last day. It was given to me by a great statesman, by a great man with a great soul . . . I stand here in great humility with a knowledge of my poor limitations, trying to follow in the footsteps of one so great and fine as the late Speaker Bankhead.

"Will Bankhead was a human being. He loved individuals; he loved people in the mass. His was a great soul. It will be many days before his light passes from this world."

The House Minority Leader, Representative Joe Martin, praised his late political rival as a "truly great American" who always respected the rights of the minority.

The voice of the House chaplain, the Rev. James Shera Montgomery, quavered and finally broke as he recited Bankhead's favorite Psalm, the one hundred and third.

"My dear friend and beloved brother," he concluded, "how I loved you. In the other hour when he breathed his last the heavens opened above his couch and the soul of William B. Bankhead became immortal."

Before the service the House adopted a resolution expressing its official sorrow and the death of its leader. Representative Steagall, dean of the Alabama delegation, in offering it, said:

"Our beloved Speaker, William B. Bankhead, passed away yesterday morning at 1:30. If I possessed the greatest learning and the widest command of words, language would still be bankrupt were I to undertake to express what is in my heart and what is in the hearts of the members of the House of Representatives.

"His love is not ours alone, but his passing is a loss to the Nation and a loss to mankind . . .

"When he came to the speakership of the House of Representatives, this great office that has been filled always by great men, statesmen, patriots—great Americans always, regardless of their party affiliations—none surpassed him in the qualities of leadership, courage, loyalty to party, loyalty to friends, devotion to convictions and understanding of national affairs and the problems of government and parliamentary procedure. None who follow in that great office will soon excel him in all the qualities that make the ideal American statesman."

A double male quartet from the St. Margaret's Episcopal Church sang and the Rev. William S. Abernathy, a substitute chaplain of the Senate, pronounced the benediction.

Admission to the public galleries was by card only as a guard of 200 policemen kept the crowds out of the Capitol because of the presence of the President.

It was the third funeral of a House Speaker to be attended by President Roosevelt since his inauguration in 1933. The others were those of Henry T. Rainey, of Illinois, who died in 1934, and Joseph W. Byrns, of Tennessee, who died in 1936.

Sixty-four members of the House and 29 Senators accompanied the President and Administration officials aboard two sections of a special train last night en route to Jasper. Henry A. Wallace, Democratic nominee for Vice President, a position for which the late Speaker was nominated at the Chicago convention, wired from Des Moines that he would attend the final rites in Alabama.

True to the tradition of the stage, Tallulah Bankhead did not go to Jasper but left Washington after the Capitol service for Hershey, Pa., to fill a theatrical engagement.

Whatever their aptitude in scholastic tests marking the opening of freshman week at George Washington University, Georgetown University and National Park College, Forest Glen, Md., yesterday, freshmen show real aptitude for making friends quickly. There appeared nothing "green" about the several hundred who milled across the campuses yesterday to begin their college careers. George Washington and National Park campuses were paradises for photographers with an eye for feminine pulchritude. No matter how haphazardly they swung their camera lenses, young women of charm and beauty met the camera eye.

In vain they looked for shy maidens sitting overawed in corners, at teas and assemblies. A reporter rambled around the George Washington campus for half an hour looking for a "typical shy freshman." He found none who were either typical, shy, or even looked like freshmen.

The stag-line of upperclassmen outside the Hall of Government at George Washington expressed approval of this year's crop of yearling women. "They seem to be getting better every year," said one young gentleman in sport shoes. "Not bad," was the general opinion. "Not bad at all."

A floral tribute was placed by Judge Robert P. Patterson, Assistant Secretary of War, and a prayer was offered by the Rev. Ulysses Pierce, pastor of All Soul's Unitarian Church, here which was attended by President Taft.

Senator Robert A. Taft, of Ohio, represented the family at the exercises. Wade H. Ellis, attorney, was in charge, and attending were Judge Harold M. Stephens, Associate Justice of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia; Jo V. Morgan, representing the District Bar Association, and Mrs. Olive Faircloth and Miss Laura Berrien, representing the Woman's Bar of the District. President Taft was born in 1857. His death occurred in 1930.

Contract Bridge

Duplicate experts would blush for shame if they were caught playing today's hand at three no-trump. It was deliberately overbid by Contributor V. D. P. and his wife at a critical point in a rubber bridge match. Through help in the play by the defense and skillful technique on the part of declarer, the contract was made.

"The situation was desperate," writes V. D. P., "and something had to be done about it immediately if we were to prevent them from winning the rubber.

The cards:

	♠ 10 8 6 5 ♡ Q J 7 ◇ Q 7 ♣ Q J 10 3
♠ J 7 4 2 ♡ 10 5 4 3 ◇ K 8 3 ♣ 7 6	NORTH WEST EAST SOUTH ♠ K Q 9 ♡ K 9 3 ◇ A 10 5 4 ♣ K 9 2	♠ A 3 ♡ A 8 6 ◇ J 9 6 2 ♣ A 8 5 4

"East dealt and when he bid a diamond I had hopes of swaying him into doubling me at a one no-trump contract—you know how people keep hoping. So I bid a heart. Heaven will protect the working girl and housewife, I guess, because M'lady North, the Mrs. V. D. P., bid one spade after West's pass. East kept quiet, and then came my Southern one no-trump. Northern Maria bid two no-trump (she explained later, 'I had seven honor cards') and when East passed I bid three no-trump. No expert could have had any more nerve, and I'm no expert. It's a wonder East didn't double.

"West opened the deuce of spades. That gave me the count in spades and knocked into the hat the hope of getting my ninth trick in that suit. My trouble was that with the exception of the club suit I was likely to establish the setting trick in whatever suit I touched. All I could do was watch and let things come to me.

"The spade ten brought out the ace from East, and the spade three was taken by my king. The king of clubs was left to me; the jack of clubs held, but the ten of clubs was taken by the ace; West cried eight of diamonds. East, however, wasn't going to be friendly to me, regardless of his partner's discards; he led the six of hearts. The heart king trembled but held. The way people won't take their aces! The heart jack was taken by East's ace and here he fell asleep, for a heart return now would have made me lose my contracts. East, dear fellow, led the diamond two; I played the four, West the king, and from dummy I pitched the queen. (This is what this hand is all about.)

"West's lead of the spade seven was taken by South's queen; then over to the dummy and the queen of hearts. The last club was cashed and the diamond seven gave me the chance to finesse the diamond ten. The diamond ace took the ninth trick, burying the spade jack, spade ten and diamond jack, all dangerous cards. Pretty lucky, don't you think?"

Plant Reopens After Blast; Rush for Jobs

Kenvil, N. J., Sept. 16 (AP).—The attitude of this explosives manufacturing area was epitomized today as the blast-shattered Hercules Powder Co. plant resumed partial production and an ever-changing group of jobseekers, undeterred by 48 workers' deaths, sought their jobs.

Another workman, Warren Waldron, 19, of Mount Arlington, died today in Dover General Hospital of injuries received last Thursday when a terrific explosion in the smokeless powder unit destroyed more than 20 buildings and did $1,000,000 damage.

Seven of the 43 victims in the Dover General Hospital were reported still in a critical condition. Fifteen in two Morristown hospitals were believed out of danger.

It was learned meanwhile from various sources that the fact that emergency equipment was available at the Army's nearby Picatinny Arsenal probably had prevented another and more terrific blast Thursday.

The major explosion cut the power lines to the two nitrating plants in the dynamite line. Enough compressed air was available to "blow down" the chemicals when processing stopped in one building, but not in the other, these sources said. A hurry call was made to Picatinny and a motor-drive air compressor was delivered before the chemicals in the second nitrating building reached an explosive point.

Had the one building exploded, one source said, the entire dynamite line would have gone up with "terrific damage."

Calling the explosion scene "one of the most shocking sights" he had ever seen, Representative Charles A. Eaton said he would "insist to the last ditch that this tragedy be sifted down to the bottom."

The dynamite line resumed work today. Applicants for work, however, were told there would be no hiring at present.

In Washington, Dies Committee investigators were to confer on the explosion and other facets of their New Jersey inquiry, but said there would be no announcements tonight.

Senator Barbour (Republican), of New Jersey, said, however, he was making a study to determine if it were possible that the explosions were caused by rifle fire from a nearby hill.

Kenvil, the Senator stated, was situated in a pocket, with surrounding hills rising as high as 1,200 feet above sea level at a distance of two miles from the plant.

Memorial Is Held For John Possehl; Union President

Labor leaders paid tribute to John Possehl, president of the International Union of Operating Engineers, at memorial services yesterday at Gawler's funeral home, where his body lay in state.

He was described as "a sound, constructive trade unionist who gave all he had to the advancement of his own people and the American labor movement generally" by George Meany, secretary-treasurer of the American Federation of Labor.

"Few men," said Meany, who presided at the services, "have given more to the movement than John Possehl did by his efforts to bring peace to our industry by abating quarrels among its members."

Engineers from distant points in the United States and Canada as well as Washington were present.

Funeral services for Mr. Possehl will be held at 4 p. m. today, with burial in Savannah, Ga., his native city.

Nazis Renew Raids Despite London Fog

in this message was the term "approaching."

["Aided by squadrons of the Czech and Polish comrades, using only a small proportion of their total strength and under cloud conditions of some difficulty, they cut to rags and tatters three separate waves of murderous assault," Churchill said.

[Results of Monday's air fighting, which brought London four daylight alarms but only one real bombardment, were not announced. Two German bombers were said to have been shot down during the long raid of Monday night-Tuesday morning.]

Barrage Cable Trips Raider

While it lasted, the German night raid was a hot fight.

Antiaircraft shells burst above the low clouds which concealed the invading planes and dimmed the moon over London.

A number of houses suffered hits from high explosives and incendiary bombs in the Midlands, where one German plane fouled a balloon barrage cable and crashed.

The night's battle in London began the moment the evening alarm sounded. Immediately, antiaircraft batteries roared into a full-throated, earth-jarring chorus. Bombs dropping in one area proved a thudding overtone to the bark of the guns.

A second heavy salvo of bombs followed the first, falling in the same area, after the other lot detonated with a roar that rumbled across the darkened metropolitan area.

Fires Set in North

Other Germans dropped incendiary bombs while flying across a northern industrial belt. Fire damage was reported in that sector.

One raider dropped bombs on a northeast town at dusk.

The roof of a school was damaged severely by a bomb just after classes ended for the day. The teacher, en route home, was wounded by a bomb splinter.

Even as the German planes approached, a communique acknowledged that casualties Sunday night were "a little greater" than in recent raids although not as great as on the first night of the intense air siege one week ago Saturday when more than 300 persons were killed.

During the 24 hours before the dusk raiders approached, Londoners had been held under intermittent alarm a total of more than 15 hours by the Sunday night raid and four daylight raids Monday.

After a dusk-to-dawn raid which kept weary Londoners in underground shelter nine hours and 28 minutes, Nazi raiders returned to the attack yesterday morning.

First Attack Repelled

The first of the four daylight alarms sounded in London at 9:57 a. m. (3:57 a. m., E. S. T.), but apparently not until the fourth, at 2:10 p. m. (8:10 a. m., E. S. T.), were the Germans able to penetrate the capital's defenses.

During the first alarm a large formation of bombers was encountered inland by British fighters, who turned it back.

Within 10 minutes after the raiders were sighted they had turned tail and were heading for home, the British Press Association said.

There was antiaircraft activity in London during the third alarm, but the hundreds of batteries were silent throughout the second.

The fourth alarm lasted three hours and 49 minutes—the longest daylight attack on London so far except for one of four hours and nine minutes last Friday.

Only intermittent, relatively light antiaircraft fire challenged the raiders although chattering machine-guns and thrumming airplane motors told of a brief air battle at the start of the attack.

Explosions were heard on various sides, but only occasional bombs seemed to fall. Some of the explosions were of time bombs dropped previously.

Lay Keel for U. S. S. New Jersey— Second to Be Built in New Program fine weather ended as a stiffening southwest wind brought choppy seas, and light mist turned to fog.

Although the R. A. F. concentrated its offensive power on the Channel area, another bombing attack on the great Templehof Airdrome in Berlin, the second within a week, was reported by the air ministry.

British bombers roved the continental coast line from Hamburg to Le Havre Sunday night, pounding at German shipping and bases which would be vital to any attempted invasion of Britain, the ministry said. Other squadrons struck into Germany proper, bombing communication centers and facilities for moving men and supplies toward the British Isles.

At Antwerp, the air ministry said, "many tons" of high explosive bombs and hundreds of incendiaries were dumped on the docks and shipping by heavy bombers working in relays for about three hours.

The bright moonlight clearly revealed many barges moored at the docks and basins.

An earlier air ministry communique reported "further heavy attacks" on concentrations of war supplies, barges, shipping, dockyards and ports at Hamburg, Wilhelmshafen, Antwerp, Flushing, Ostend, Dunkerque, Calais and Boulogne.

At the same time other squadrons of R. A. F. bombers were ranging over distribution centers at Hamm, Osnabrueck, Soeste and Krefeld, unloading their cargoes on whatever targets they found within their range.

Warship Reported Hit

Direct hits were reported on a German warship off the Dutch island of Terschelling in the North Sea. Sever damage was claimed on a military tanker and supply ship at the Elbe estuary.

Freight yards at Hamburg and a railway junction at Rheine were bombed, the air ministry said.

All of the British planes were reported to have returned safely "from these extensive and successful operations."

Planes of the coastal command were reported to have sunk a 5,000-ton German supply ship lying at anchor at Ymuiden on the Dutch coast. Other craft of the same command attacked German convoys, striking heavily at shipping concentrations along the Channel coast.

"We hope that by continuing the attacks, the R. A. F. can further postpone an invasion by hammering away at ports," a high R. A. F. officer said.

"The urgency of battering every flotilla ready for embarkation, every concentration and gun emplacement observed on the shore, involved changes in the rest of the bombing program.

"But British air circles consider the coast of such importance that the full force of our blows will be directed on it."

Authorities summed up what they described as the advantages of the British attacks as contrasted to the "indiscriminate" attacks of the Germans. They included:

1. Attacks on German oil supplies, considered in the light of minimum consumption and maximum possible imports, will cause the Reich to feel the pinch within a few months instead of years.
2. Despite the execution by program of bombing projects, R. A. F. losses in bombers are much less than expected, whereas at the present rate of German losses the Reich will be unable to keep pace in air strength once reserves are used up.
3. Consistent attacks on communications centers further have bogged down German preparations for an invasion.
4. The persistent bombing of military objectives, particularly in the Ruhr, which "has been catching it hot for four months," in addition to slowing up the military and industrial machines, was considered to have a severe effect on civilian morale.

The aviation squadrons listed were the 102d Observation Squadron of New York, the 153d Observation of Mississippi, and the 107th Observation Squadron of Michigan.

All of the New York troops will go to Fort McClellan, Ala.; the Ohioans to Camp Shelby, Miss., and the Michigan and Wisconsin units to Camp Beauregard, La. The Mississippi air squadron will be stationed at Meridan, Miss.

The Hawaiian Guard consists of two infantry regiments, and Puerto Rican outfit of brigade headquarters, two infantry regiments and a battalion each of heavy artillery, light artillery, antiaircraft guns and engineers.

The 60,000 Guardsmen who reported for duty yesterday will spend ten days at their home armories undergoing physical examinations and preparing to leave for training areas previously announced. They include the Forty-fourth, Thirtieth, Forty-fifth and Forty-first divisions, 18 separate Coast Artillery regiments and four Air Corps observation squadrons.

D. C. Unit Awaits Call

Except for one Virginia and one Maryland artillery regiment, none of the troops of the District of Columbia, Maryland or Virginia have yet been ordered into Federal service. The local 260th Coast Artillery (antiaircraft) is expected to be ordered to duty November 15 and will be sent to Fort Bliss, Tex. The remainder of the District, Maryland and Virginia guardsmen making up the Twenty-ninth Division is expected to be called early in January.

Tank units deferred from the calls so far will be ordered to duty when new mechanized equipment becomes available.

In his address, broadcast over the Columbia network, Gen. Marshall stressed the importance of "hardened, seasoned and highly disciplined" troops.

British Employ 'Come-Hither' Tactics Against Italians

culated to draw the Italians forward. It is no secret to the Italians that if they continue to advance they will lay themselves open increasingly to swift flank attacks by powerful British tank and armored car units, in position to sweep in from the desert toward the coast. Nor are the Fascists oblivious to the fact that their other flank is exposed to the big guns of the British Mediterranean fleet.

Despite the "come-hither" strategy of the British, the "thin khaki line" of their advance forces, which was intended to be nothing more than a light screen, is falling back slowly, harrowing the enemy.

At the outset the British met the invading Italians with a colossal bluff. For several weeks the defense of Salum and its environs, which was the original Egyptian objective of the enemy, presented a bristling appearance from land and air. But in fact the place was occupied by a skeleton force of decoys.

Advancing Column Hit

The artillery and aerial barrage with which the Italians began their offensive four days ago found a mark among an imposing array of wooden tanks and equally wooden guns. After putting up a rapid-fire defense to give the impression of formidable opposition, the skeleton force withdrew with only one casualty.

From the desert, on the other hand, the British inflicted substantial casualties on the invaders as they advanced through defiles to occupy Salum and continued beyond. For example, the British asserted, a column of nine trucks filled with Italian infantry was caught by the fire of British guns as it descended a hill and five vehicles were set afire, with many of the Italians killed and wounded.

The British left behind in Salum an intricate system of booby traps to greet the invaders, even mining the lavatory in the Salum rest house.

Advance British tank detachments were reported officially to be giving a good account of themselves in quick thrusts against the right flank of the Fascist offensive. Hostilities are in full swing only in that the advancing Italians face a small British force, which is retreating strategically. The real clash is yet to come.

The Camels Are Gone

On the British side I have seen the stage being set for what may go down in the records as a classic example of desert warfare under modern mechanized conditions. The army of the defenders is almost exclusively an army on wheels and tractor treads. The camels and donkeys of wilderness battles a quarter of a century ago have been replaced by tanks and armored cars. Even in the transport required to supply the desert army, trucks have been substituted almost entirely for pack animals.

The modern equivalents of the mounts ridden by tribesmen under Lawrence of Arabia are heavily armored motor vehicles. What the British army in Egypt lacks in numbers it makes up in quality of the troops.

The desert combat forces are composed largely of crack detachments whose names are renowned throughout the world. These first-class British units are backed up by a contingent of New Zealanders and Australians on whose fighting qualities no slur has even been cast.

Heat Intense as Battle Rages

By the Associated Press

Cairo, Egypt, Sept. 16.—Italian soldiers marching into Egypt in a swiftly developing desert battle for empire and fighting British advance troops in 110 to 120 degrees heat and thus far have suffered heavy losses from the withering British fire, it was officially reported tonight.

The British apparently have suddenly stiffened, military information indicated.

[Italian newspapers asserted the Fascist forces had broken through the first major line of British fortifications. The Italian high high command reported increasing aerial activity, and said the advance is "continuing."]

Italian planes supporting the motorized drive across the dessert ran into stiff opposition, the British said. British fighters shot down six enemy bombers, it was reported, and three others were reported by the British as probably destroyed. One British plane was lost.

Almost all the Egyptians—with whom the Italians say they are not at war—have been removed from the western desert or regions threatened by the fighting.

An Italian offensive threatening the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan from troop concentrations in Eritrea and the southeast corner of Libya thus far has failed to materialize.

Lawrence Townsend Becomes Carpenter

Octogenarian Designs and Constructs Solarium at His Beech Hill Farm, Then Builds 'Winter Overcoat' for It

By Hope Ridings Miller

WHEN AN OCTOGENARIAN builds himself a solarium and then a "winter overcoat" to protect it from the snow and sleet—that's news. And that is exactly what Lawrence Townsend, former United States envoy to Portugal and Belgium, has done. Recently, after celebrating his eightieth birthday at Beech Hill Farm, the Townsend summer place at Schroon Lake, N. Y., he started something he had never tried before, and has now become a first-rate designer and builder.

Hope Ridings Miller

This is how it happened. Last winter when he and his wife were spending a few weeks in Florida, they visited friends whose house had a very special room arranged so that it could always be open to the sun's rays. Mr. Townsend determined then and there to have such a room for himself—and now he has. From miles around people have been making special trips to Beech Hill Farm to see the solarium, which he built entirely alone. Writing to Washington friends, Mrs. Townsend describes her husband's new toy as a small room with an open roof arranged so that it can be turned as the sun moves.

It is the pride of his life, she avers, and since it has attracted so much attention, "he has decided to make what he calls an overcoat for it"—an inclosure of strong wood, covered with a coat of paint.

Recent guests at Beech Hill Farm were Mr. and Mrs. Rex Townsend, of New York, and Mrs. William Vom Rath and her debutante daughter, Eleanor, who were there from Glen Head for a few days.

Latest reports from Beech Hill have it that the Townsends will be back at their Twenty-first street home sometime next month. Meanwhile, Mrs. Townsend has been completing plans for her regular winter concerts. The wag who once observed that "Washington society is two parts official dinners and diplomatic receptions and one part Mrs. Townsend's morning musicales" certainly knew his Capital City. Even though the concerts will be fewer in number this year, you can depend on it that the audiences will be just as big-league as ever.

WHEN MARY DERN BAXTER gets back from Philadelphia today, she's going to find that life for her from now until September 23, when she becomes Mrs. Herbert Frank Goodrich, will be just one party after another. It will, that is, if she accepts all the invitations showered upon her.

Already on her calendar is a luncheon to be given Friday by Mrs. Bennett Clark and Mrs. William A. Morgan at the latter's home on Thirty-second street. And several other fetes are being worked into her schedule.

Not many Washingtonians know it, but the Baxter-Goodrich romance budded and blossomed right here in our town a very few months ago. Last spring, Judge Goodrich came over from Philadelphia for a brief visit with his brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Goodrich. The latter arranged a small dinner in honor of the visitor and took special pains to follow his instruction to "get some attractive young woman for me."

Mrs. Baxter was invited; and before the evening was over others at the dinner made mental notes that the guest of honor was more than pleased with his sister-in-law's selection. He took Mrs. Baxter to the theater the following night; came back to town to see her the next week-end; and before anybody really knew what was brewing, he had asked the Edgar Goodriches to invite Mary Baxter to their summer place at Rehoboth for a few days. A short time afterward, the couple became engaged; and you know the rest of the story.

Introducing—

Harris & Ewing.

Robert W. Sloans Return Next Week

The bride is the former Miss Ella Mae Cox, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Cox of Manson, Iowa. Mr. Sloan is the son of Mrs. Blanche Sloan, of Portland, Oreg.

New York Avenue Presbyterian Church on Saturday afternoon was the scene of the ceremony at which the Rev. Dr. Peter Marshall officiated at 5 o'clock. The bride, who wore a teal blue suit with wine accessories, was attended by Miss Rose Melling as matron of honor. The latter had chosen a wine-colored suit with black accessories. R. Herndon Young, jr., was best man.

The bride attended the College of Idaho at Caldwell, Idaho, and is a member of Sigma Epsilon sorority. Mr. Sloan was a graduate student at the same college and is a member of Beta Chi Fraternity.

Betty Bagnam Engaged To Wed Chas. W. Moore

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel B. Bagnam, of Washington, have announced the engagement of their daughter, Betty, to Charles W. Moore, son of Mrs. Minnie Moore, of this city.

The bride-elect is a member of Beta Chi Sorority. No date has been set for the wedding.

About the Town

—with Dudley Harmon

BETTY SHOUSE and Cuthbert Train have selected Saturday, October 26, as the date of their wedding. The ceremony will take place in the late afternoon at St. John's Church and will be followed by a small reception for relatives and close friends at the home of Miss Shouse's mother, Mrs. D. Lawrence Groner. The Groners have just returned from a summer on Cape Cod.

DUDLEY HARMON

IT MUST SEEM rather strange, if you're a grown woman with children, suddenly to find yourself living off a weekly allowance doled out by a hitherto complete stranger. Yet that's the case with the many refugee mothers here with their babies from England, which forbids the taking of currency out of the country now.

Mr. and Mrs. Lucius Wilmerding have three British youngsters and their mother over here, the family of a good friend now in Wales with the Army. As the Wilmerdings are parents of four, they decided to take another house for the family. Mr. Wilmerding has leased a residence in the beautiful Massachusetts town of Amherst, where the climate is much better than Washington's.

THE HOUSE on O street in Georgetown where Keith Officer kept bachelor hall is now to be filled with youngsters. It has just been leased by Commander and Mrs. L. H. Thebaud, who will have with them four young refugees, children of a British Admiral who is a friend of theirs. Commander Thebaud has just been ordered here from Annapolis.

By an odd coincidence, this house is owned by an Englishman, Terence Shown, one of few diplomats ever to buy a house in the Capital. Mr. Shown was stationed here several years ago and now in Cairo.

THE MOST pathetic refugee tale we've heard is of the mother and tiny babe who have been taken in by a Long Island family. The child was born the day after its father was killed fighting for England.

EVERYBODY SEEMS to be moving this month, including the Finnish Minister and Mme Procope. The new legation is on Woodland drive, a few blocks from the present red brick residence on Tracy Place.

ONE OF THE many interesting personalities which the war has brought to Washington is Lars Christiansen, Norwegian explorer. He discovered several islands in the Antarctic and named the coast of one of them for the Norwegian Minister here, Wilhelm Munthe de Morgenstierne.

A former whaler, Mr. Christiansen read on one of his fishing trips a chronicle written almost 200 years ago by an Englishman who thought some islands might exist in the region of what is now King Haakon Land at the South Pole. So Mr. Christiansen decided it would be interesting to see if this were true. At his own expense he fitted out a vessel and with his wife set out for the Antarctic. He later wrote a book of his discoveries.

In New York when Norway was invaded, Mr. Christiansen was pressed into service by the legation and comes here several times a week.

John H. Holmes And Bride on N. Y. Wedding Trip

Mr. and Mrs. John Hunter Holmes, whose wedding took place on Saturday, are now on a wedding trip to New York. Returning next week, they will make their home at Presidential Gardens, Alexandria.

The bride is the former Miss Adele Melbourne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Percival Granville Melbourne, of Laurel, Md. Mr. Holmes is the son of Mrs. George Kirby Holmes, of Washington. The rectory of St. Anthony's Church was the scene of the noon ceremony. Later, there was a wedding breakfast at Toll House Tavern, Silver Spring.

Mrs. H. Stanley Hinrichs, sister of the bride, was matron of honor and Kirby Holmes, brother of the bridegroom, was best man. The former Miss Melbourne attended Misses Eastman's school and Temple Secretarial School. Mr. Holmes attended the Univeristy of Maryland and Benjamin Franklin University.

Mrs. Pitcher Will Entertain At Tea Today

Mrs. William Pitcher will entertain at tea this afternoon in her Crescent Place apartment for residents interested in the newly formed Chamber Music Guild.

The guild will present a series of concerts this season, the first of which will take place November 5 at 8:45 at the Carlton.

Mrs. Edwin Watson, Mrs. Stanley Woodward and Mrs. Foster Adams are among the sponsors for the concerts.

Miss Frazier Picks Date of Wedding

Miss Mary Jane Frazier, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel D. Frazier, has set November 16 as the day of her marriage to Anthony Bowers Coker.

The prospective bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Coker. The wedding will take place at the home of the bride's parents at 1446 Spring road.

British Order 6,000 Engines From Packard

Detroit, Sept. 16 (U.P.)—A ritish armaments purchasing board has awarded the Packard Motor Car Co. a $125,000,000 order for 6,000 Rolls Royce airplane engines and parts, it was learned tonight.

GILMAN

The order will be filled along with a $62,500,000 contract from the U. S. Government for 3,000 engines given Packard last Saturday. The War Department will grant Packard $30,000,000 to build and equip an airplane engine plant, to be owned by the United States but operated by Packard.

The Ford Motor Co. originally was offered the British contract, but Henry Ford refused to produce war goods in this country for a foreign nation.

M. M. Gilman, Packard president, disclosed that production could be started on the engines within ten months after the contract had been signed. He estimated that the production rate at first would be 20 engines per month and would reach a total of 840 in 15 months.

British and Australian Envoys Talk With Hull

Problems confronting Britain and Australia as a result of threatened Japanese expansion in the Far East were discussed for an hour with Secretary of State Hull yesterday by British Ambassador Lord Lothian and Australian Minister Richard G. Casey.

Informed sources indicated that Australia wishes to know to what extent it can rely on the United States Fleet if all British seapower is concentrated in the Atlantic.

U. S. Naval Experts Arrive In Newfoundland

St. John's Newfoundland, Sept. 16 (AP).—A United States board of naval experts arrived in Newfoundland today aboard the cruiser St. Louis to survey sites for naval and air bases under the agreement with Britain.

The board, headed by Rear Admiral J. W. Greenslade, came here after a similar inspection in Berumda. Three United States airplanes also have arrived, presumably to facilitate the survey.

Keel Laid for Second Huge U. S. Battleship

Philadelphia, Sept. 16 (AP).—The keel was laid today at the Philadelphia Navy Yard for the United States Navy's second 45,000-ton battleship, largest fighting vessels in the world, and former Secretary of the Navy Charles Edison declared:

"The building of this ship is the building of something to defend human rights."

The giant floating fortress will be christened the New Jersey. The keel of a sister ship, the Iowa, was laid at the Brooklyn Navy Yard several weeks ago.

Other National defense developments in this Philadelphia area today were:

Sale at a sheriff's auction of Cramp's Shipyard, famous for naval building during the World War but idle for more than ten years, to satisfy $1,300,000 in defaulted taxes and $1,000,000 in Federal claims and clear the way for its reopening.

Formation of a special squad of 1,650 detectives and policemen to guard against sabotage and spies in the vital defense industries of the Philadelphia area.

Cocos Island Bases Offered to U. S.

Los Angeles, Sept. 16 (AP).—Leon Cortes, former President of Costa Rica, said in an interview that before retiring several months ago he offered the United States permission to establish naval bases on Cocos Island.

Cortes said the bases could be used for guarding the Pacific entrance to the Panama Canal. He said his successor, Dr. Rafael Anger Calderon Guardia, was pursuing a similar policy of promoting close cooperation with the United States in Western Hemisphere defense.

Socialists Will Seek Repealer of Draft Act

New York, Sept. 16 (AP).—The Socialist Party's national executive committee asserted today that the Conscription Act "will make for war rather than for peace" and pledged to seek its repeal.

"The law represents in part an attempt to solve unemployment by putting men in uniform," said Travers Clement, Socialist national secretary.

Black Eagle Hones Talons For Goering

Col. Julian Announces He Plans Dogfight With Reichsmarshal

By the United Press

New York, Sept. 16.—Col. Hubert Fauntleroy Julian, who is to Harlem what Prince Mike Romanoff is to Hollywood and Broadway, announced today that Reichsmarshal Goering has accepted his challenge to a duel 10,000 feet over the English Channel.

The Black Eagle, every inch the equal of Goering in the cut of a uniform, proclaimed the Nazi air force commander's acceptance of his challenge as a "splendid opportunity for him to "show that lousy nothing-divided-by-nothing."

The German Embassy at Washington denounced the whole affair as "absurd," but Col. Julian went right on with plans to buy himself a Messerschmitt or so and keep his date with death. For last date with death, he sailed for Finland 13 days after peace had been signed. Before that he was off to Ethiopia, where he miffed Haile Selassie by cracking up Ethiopia's airplane on the palace grounds and Haile Selassie told him to get on out of there.

"Man Without a Country"

This incensed the British-born Eagle so that when Italy won the fight he decided he was an Italian citizen and changed his name to Humberto Fauntleroyana Juliano, but the Italian citizenship didn't take and, after an Ellis Island interval, the Black Eagle decided he is a "man without a country."

"No government will be involved," he explained about the air duel. "I fight and die for my race, to avenge an insult. We will see who is a baboon."

What rankled the Eagle's breast originally was word which reached him that Adolf Hitler, in Mein Kampf, had written that "all Negroes are half apes and baboons and half wits."

He forthwith cabled Goering his challenge to an "aerial duel to avenge this cowardly insult." It cost him $13.64.

"On Saturday morning," he continued, "I was out with my dogs when a telephone call from Washington came. My wife answered and a man told her: 'This is the military attache of the German Embassy. Tell that black swine his challenge has been accepted and to be on the spot as promised.'

"Never fear, I will be there."

The date is for October 12, 30 days from the date of the challenge, and Col. Julian in the meantime must find passage and a Messerschmitt.

Britain "Secretly Thrilled"

"I will use a German-made plane," he explained, "So there will be no question about superiority of equipment. If he sends a whole fleet of planes to get me instead of coming alone, that will be that. It will be a pleasure to die amidst bomb and shell just to show what rats they are."

The intrepid eagle, who has to his credit a Harlem-to-Ethiopia flight which cracked up in Flushing Bay, confided that the British government was "secretly thrilled" about it all.

And now, one last word from the eagle:

"I have but one life to give. I give it gladly. My wife said to me: 'Darling, I will be pleased to sacrifice you to such a cause.'"

Young Wanderer Walks Soles Off His Shoes

On August 11 he disappeared and was found in Charlottesville, Va., after police in three States had searched five days for him.

Richard disappeared again last Wednesday and no word was received until he showed up yesterday at his home at 2020 Shepherd street northeast.

He told his mother, Mrs. Edna Wilhite, he had slept in parked cars.

Agriculture Staff to Get Training for Defense

By Edward Ryan

A correspondence course in the national defense program is being prepared by the Agriculture Department for its employes, it was learned yesterday.

The course in defense will be one part of an expanded employe-training program. It will be designed to show employes where their jobs fit into the defense drive and suggest new ways for them to help the national program.

As a first step in getting employes to emphasize the defense angle in their work, the department's personnel director, Roy Hendrickson, has organized a new training section headed by Samuel Board.

Board Has Four Aides

Board formerly headed the division of qualifications and training, which has now been split into a division of employment and a division of training. His aides in the new set-up are James Grady, correspondence expert; Robert Hubbard, F. B. Billings, and Joseph Cooper.

Hendrickson said that details of the correspondence course on National defense are still being studied by the training section. The plan, he said, will be to work out a simple training course that will tell the employes, a bit at a time, what the defense problems in agricultural work are, and how the Department is meeting them.

Need for the correspondence course system, he pointed out, results from the fact that about seven-eighths of the departments 94,000 employes are in the field. The technique has been used before in the training program, he said.

Other Courses Planned

The defense drive is cropping up in other activities of the department connected with employe training. The Agriculture Graduate School, which furnished afterwork training to employes and others, is listing these courses for this year, to be given through American University:

"The World Crisis and the Handling of National Resources," to be given by Dr. Rudolf Clemen.

"The Geography of National Defense," to be given by Dr. M. J. Proudfoot.

The Agriculture School's own teachers will give, among others, these courses:

Economic sof Latin-American nations, including study of programs for building economic solidarity of the Americas; two courses in naval architecture, two in ship construction and one in radio engineering; philosophy and the world crisis; the fundamentals of international law and relations, including analysis of measures short of war, effect of war on agriculture and, toward the close of the second semester, prevention of war.

Other Agencies Interested

Unlike the school, Hendrickson pointed out, the correspondence course willl train workers on their own jobs.

This branch of employe-training, it was explained, is drawing close attention of personnel chiefs in other Government agencies. Many of them see the Defense Commission's program for training new workers for key industries as a guide for enlarging the Government's efforts to give more training to its own employes.

Programs for training employes on the job have been developed in several agencies. Among the first to set up formal training programs were the military departments and Coast Guard. In the last two years, since the Council of Personnel Administration was set up, its members, the personnel men in the Government agencies, have spread the training idea, and new programs have been started in Agriculture, Commerce, Interior and others.

Now a committee of the personnel council has been assigned to study the training programs already in use, and find how they might be improved to aid the defense drive.

Senator Mead (Democrat), of New York, and Chairman Ramspeck of the House Civil Service Committee will speak at 3 p. m. today at the United Federal Workers conference at Almas Temple, 1315 K street northwest. The three-day conference starts at 9:30 a. m. with opening speeches by Sidney Katz and Oscar Witmer, of the District Industrial Union Council, and Jacob Baker, U. F. W. A. president.

The Civil Service Commission reported yesterday that 105 persons passed the recent examination for principal government information specialist. Of the total, 83 were placed on the register for press and publications jobs, 22 for radio information jobs.

Although the registers have been set up, officials said, those on the list will still have to go through an oral examination before they land jobs. The orals are given to those near the top of the list as new vacancies open in the Government agencies.

Women's G. O. P. Will Observe 'Constitution Day'

A patriotic program observing Constitution Day will be staged by the women's membership committee of the Willkie-McNary Campaign Club of the District Republican State Committee today. The affair will begin with a luncheon in the Willard Htoel at 1 p. m.

Speakers will be Rufus Lusk, president of the Washington Taxpayers Association, and James A. Councilor, president of the Willkie-McNary Campaign Club.

Edwin Steffe, baritone, will sing the National Anthem. William Tyler Page will recite "The American's Creed," of which he is author.

'Mean' Horse Enough To Drive Man to Drink

Petersburg, Va., Sept. 16 (AP)—Richard Allen, 26, of near Dinwiddie, was fined $10 and costs in Prince George trial justice court today after being arraigned on a charge of driving a horse while drunk.

The court reduced the charge to that of drunkenness after Allen had testified that the horse was so "mean" that it refused to be harnessed. Allen said he was even afraid to go in the stable with the animal until he took three drinks of liquor yesterday afternoon.

Workers' Union Sets Precedent, Bargains With Government

WHEN Government workers get together these days, talk usually turns to the President's plan for a 10 per cent reduction in nondefense expenditures, and to the possibility that the reduction may be made at the expense of their pay and working conditions. The only people who actually are doing something about it are delegates of the United Federal Workers of America, headed by Secretary-Treasurer Eleanor Nelson. They have presented the workers' point of view in conference with Bureau of the Budget officials.

Eleanor Nelson

"I believe we're the first workers' union to enter into collective bargaining with the Government," says Miss Nelson. "We've accumulated material on the expenses of various departments and agencies. In round-table discussions with budget authorities, we have suggested ways in which the reduction can be made without affecting working conditions." The subject is a major item on the agenda of the U. F. W. A. convention being held here this week, she says. Delegates also will discuss the five-day week, pay for overtime work and the limitation of working hours for employes in the field.

News of Mrs. Vincent Astor's divorce reminded one Washingtonian of the time he and other World War soldiers and sailors stood in line for ham and eggs at the Y. M. C. A. in Bordeaux, France. The lady who had cooked the victuals and was serving them was Mrs. Astor; the man ahead of him in line was Mrs. Astor's ex-butler.

Lost—Lady's bag containing eight baseball bats, six balls, eight or ten gloves, a chest protector and a catcher's mask. Somewhere near Taft-Burroughs Playground, Twentieth and Newton streets northeast, last Saturday night. It belongs to the M. P. M. Market softball team, composed of high school girls in Mount Rainier, Hyattsville and the Woodridge section of Washington. They had finished practice at the playground, explains Manager Stuart Y. Mosely, and he was preparing to put the bag in the trunk of the automobile which was taking them home. Discovering the compartment was locked, he rested the bag on the rear bumper and went in search of the key. Meanwhile, the owner of the car drove off without noticing the bag, which apparently became dislodged and fell in the street. The last game of the season, with the Sholl's Cafeteria team, was rained out Sunday anyway, but the girls would like to have their equipment for use next year.

A girl motorist, depressed by the prospect of three hours' solitary driving, stopped to pick up three collegiate-looking hitchhikers thumbing a ride in her direction. They turned out to be alumni of a nearby WPA project, but nonetheless were good company. They had nearly reached their destination when she stopped to send a telegram. As she parked the car a problem in etiquette arose: Should she play safe and take the car key with her, at the risk of offending her companions? Or should she trust to luck? She chose the latter course, and was mighty touched when she returned to find the car and the boys still there.

REALTY NOTE—A woman hunting for a house in Georgetown was puzzled by the expression "pioneer neighborhood" used frequently by her real estate agent. She learned finally that the phrase is real estate euphemism for a street occupied by both white and colored residents.

DeGoofey Call to Battle

WANTED TO ENLIST—Reformers between ages of 30 and 70. Women of strong jaw preferred.

This sign in front of the headquarters of the Do Something About It League yesterday signaled the return from vacation of Mrs. Henrietta DeGoofey, the league's intrepid president. The famous reformer's first act on her arrival was to start a recruiting drive.

Mrs. DeGoofey

"I have found the country virtually going to the bow-wows," said Mrs. DeGoofey who faced her press conference in a new pompadour hat. "I have literally tons of mail in my office asking me to take action. That is why I have called for volunteers."

Pressed for specific abuses, Mrs. DeGoofey declared that "for one thing the country has been virtually surrendered to the college set."

"There is nothing else in store windows," she said, "but those awful mixmaster assortments of gaudy college clothes. What's more, you can't get waited on in a store unless you come downtown in a sweater and ankle socks. What's even worse, several million parents and other adult relatives of college girls will have to go into hiding this winter because they won't be able to afford any clothes for themselves."

To Soft-Pedal Coeds and Debs

Mrs. DeGoofey declared she would start a movement to "give this country back to the grown-ups" and to put debs, subdebs and college "clothes horses" in their proper places.

"I shall probably be hanged in effigy," she said, "by all the lecturers, preachers, club women, etc., who go around smirking that they are 'friends of youth,' but I do think there are times when that part of our population that is not dry behind the ears should be kept in the background."

"What else do you find wrong?" asked a city room muckraking specialist.

"The peafowl movement in women's hats," Mrs. DeGoofey replied promptly." These crazy bird winds, coq feathers and guinea sprays that are waving around town."

"Do you think this style inhumane to birds?" asked a pet editor.

"No—inhumane to the women who wear them. I have always opposed feather trimming on women's hats. It creates too much of a parrot—or even a vulture effect in some instances. The whole thing is too symbolic—if you get what I mean."

Home Service For 'Extra Men'

Mrs. DeGoofey also charged that senators were trying to put the glamour boys of the capital under arms so they could get them out of the stag lines and have a free field themselves." I shall start a movement right away," she said, "to have Washington extra men exempted from the draft. We have too many hen parties as it is, and if we lose any more men—or what passes for men—I for one intend to move my headquarters to Nome, Alaska."

"By the way, Mrs. DeGoofey," remarked an editorial columnist, "I notice you are not wearing a Willkie or a Roosevelt button."

"No, because I have not been able to find one large enough," was the reply. All the campaign buttons are entirely too small. Now the whole purpose of wearing a button is that other people may see it, and either realize how smart you are, or start an argument.

"Now I shall confer with the button manufacturers at once and see if we can't have a button about the size of a dollar made, also have it equipped with an electrical device so it will keep the features of Mr. Willkie or Mr. Roosevelt, as the case may be, illuminated constantly on the wearer's bosom or lapel."

"Mrs. DeGoofey, a personal question if I may?" broke in a gossip reporter. "When your new illuminated buttons are perfected, which candidate's do you expect to wear?"

"I shall, of course, wear the button of the Right Candidate," was the reply.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Girl Is Disturbed When Elder Sister's Beaus Ask Her for Dates; What Attitude Should She Take?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My sister is two years older than I. She is more attractive; in fact, she is beautiful and far more popular than most girls ever hope to be. My problem is this:—several times I have been "put on the spot" by some of her many boy friends. What I mean is, they ask me for dates and I don't know what to do. I have been very much interested in some of them, but I have always said I had a previous date.

In some instances, I have been asked when she was out of town. A few of the boys wouldn't have cared if she had learned about it later; others wouldn't have wanted her to know. Also, I have received invitations when she was in town, from boys who were dating her.

A recent incident gives me need of immediate advice, so I turn to you. At a dance one night, my sister and I met a boy who immediately attracted me, and who has been constantly in my thoughts since, day and night. But he has been dating my sister ever since and I am afraid I am very, very jealous.

Last night, he telephoned and asked me to go to a dance. He said nothing about my sister, except to ask how she was. Now, I would have loved to go with him, but I think my sister has one of her temporary crushes on him. What shall I do if he calls again, as I really believe he will? Would I be disloyal to my sister in making dates with this one boy? What should my attitude be toward her boy friends? PAMELA.

Adopt an Attitude Of Neutral Friendliness

DEAR PAMELA: What to do about the new man depends upon your sister's disposition. If she is an amiable, open hearted, trustworthy person, tell her he has asked you to go dancing with him and that you would love to go, if it's all right with her. While she might be worried by his interest in you, she couldn't (if she is a square-shooter) charge you with being disloyal in wanting to accept his bid, so long as you put the proposition up to her to decide.

If, on the other hand, you know her to be jealously possessive of her beaus, don't mention the call to her. Just tell the man, the next time he calls, that you would love to go dancing with him, but it's your sister's property and you don't want to get into trouble with her.

In the face of such honesty, he will be obliged to make up his mind which sister he prefers, and the burden will be on his shoulders (where it belongs) to establish that preference in a diplomatic way. It will notify him that you are not to be played against each other, as rivals; and that you don't serve as understudy for your sister, when she is otherwise engaged or, perchance, on the outs with him.

Your attitude toward your sister's admirers should be one of neutral friendliness. Don't be misled by their occasional flirtatious attentions. When they try to date you in her absence, or intermittently during the period they are courting her, it probably means they are employing you as a second-best substitute, when they can't get through to her. They may be trying to make her jealous, or they may be so meekly enamoured of her that they are willing to try any excuse for getting into that house where she lives and oves and has her being.

In a household of sisters, it is fairly commonplace for the enterprising suitor of one sister to turn (in moments of desolation) to another sister for companionship and consolation. But the substitute sister shouldn't take the attention seriously, as having romantic significance. What it means, usually, is that the man regards her as a potential confidante, friend and ally, who will help him keep his chin up when his heart's dearest isn't giving him the breaks he desires.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Tricky Methods of Reducing Futile; Hard Work Necessary

By Ida Jean Kain

THERE IS SO MUCH bosh about reducing, you can't believe anything you hear and not all that you read. It's very confusing!

You may have heard the one about standing up to slim down—you are supposed to stand up for 20 minutes after every meal. It might do some good if you would stand up before you reached your calorie quota and walk rapidly away from the table! If you sit and eat too long you could stand up for an hour and it wouldn't help matters!

I could scarcely believe my ears when I heard a platform lecturer assure his audience that starches are twice as fattening at night as they are in the morning! Nothing could be more absurd—starch contains just so many calories, morning, noon or night.

Sleep is reputed to make you fat and going without it to make you thin. "I sleep every afternoon—that's what makes me fat," one summer boarder explained as she tucked away an oversize dinner. Of course, sleep doesn't burn quite as many calories as tennis, but a nap in the afternoon is a good wrinkle chaser. And if you get a normal amount of activity and not too many calories, you won't exceed your legal weight.

Diet Rumors

There seems to be no way of squelching the rumor that certain combinations of food can make you thin. No food or combination of foods has the inside track on reducing—it all depends on the grand total of calories. You can eat more low calorie foods than you can high calorie foods without gaining.

It is difficult to understand the frenzy over liquid diets. You can pour down just as many calories in a liquid diet as can be consumed in solid food. The only differences is that you feel hungrier sooner. And a liquid diet is so contrary to your customary fare that it is liable to upset the smooth running of the system.

One advisor of the weight-lorn set down in print this advice as to the use of fruit juice: Never drink orange juice at night—it's an energy food. Instead, drink grapefruit juice. Well, grapefruit juice and orange juice contain exactly the same number of energy units. Both are excellent in the diet, but neither will make you slim!

Can't Soak It Off

The question of epsom salts baths bobs up every now and then. You can't soak off fat! It's a good idea, however, following a stiff exercise workout, to dump about half a pound of the salts into a comfortably hot bath and stay in it for ten minutes to take out the soreness.

It is a law of avoirdupois that when you take in more calories than you burn, the excess is stored. You can discount all the other cures!

Red Cross Faces Increased Responsibility With Conscription, Women Workers Told

CALL THE ROLL—Left to right—Mrs. Homer Case, assistant chairman of the residential committee; James T. Nicholson, chairman of the Junior Red Cross; Mrs. J. K. McClintock, and Mrs. E. G. Montgomery, both vice chairmen of the Roll Call. Nicholson yesterday told Red Cross workers the need for universal response to the Roll Call to meet additional demands made on the Red Cross by the defense program

American Red Cross workers face a responsibility "greater than that connected with relief to victims of war abroad" in serving the home defense forces which will be enlarged by the draft, 82 Washington society women were told yesterday by James T. Nicholson, chairman of the Junior Red Cross.

Nicholson, who was in Europe last spring as assistant to the chairman of the organization's war relief workers, said charter obligations of the Red Cross will be markedly increased with expansion of the Army and Navy, as they are served in peace as well as in war.

He addressed women comprising the Red Cross residential committee, which will supervise enrollment of apartment house residents in the District membership drive opening Monday. Heading the committee are Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, chairman; Mrs. E. G. Moltgomery, vice chairman, and Mrs. Homer Case, assistant to the chairman.

"To carry out this task, we must seek the membership support of every loyal American," they were told.

Business Committee Meets

Meanwhile, members of the Central Business Committee learned at a luncheon yesterday that more than 1,000 employes of Washington business firms were prepared to enroll their fellow workers in the Red Cross membership campaign.

Chairman David E. McCoy told the businessmen that he was confident they would realize their quota of 19,000 Red Cross memberships from the business establishments in the city.

Members of the residential and business committees who will supervise roll call activities in their respective fields beginning Monday include:

Leaping Clear, Pilot Jams Ship Into Nazi Plane

London, Sept. 16 (AP).—One British Spitfire pilot today used his flaming plane as a projectile to bring down a German bomber, the British Press Association reported.

At the height of the fighting over London, it said, the flier shot down two or more Dornier bombers from a formation and flew away, only to find that the tail of his Spitfire was literally spitting fire.

He headed back toward the German formation, took a "bead" on the nearest Dornier, and leaped clear just before the collision.

The Briton landed safely in the street of a southeast town, the Press Association said, while the Germans crashed to earth.

Cleric Assails 'Foolish Wartime Names'

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, Sept. 16.—The Rev. J. A. F. Azanne, of Bassingbourne Vicarage, Royston Hertfordshire, appealed to fellow clergymen to take a firm hand against parents wishing to give their children "foolish wartime names"—such as "Siren" in a case where a child is born during an air raid.

Approached for comment today, registrars and hospital attendants said they have yet to meet the parents who has chosen an unusual wartime name for an infant.

"We have had many babies born here and christened, 'Winston' and 'Churchill' since the war began," commented a nurse at Queen Charlotte's Maternity Hospital, "but not one has been christened 'Siren' or anything like that."

Commons May Debate Effect of London Raids

London, Sept. 16 (AP).—A general debate on the war, especially the effect of German air raids on London, probably will be held by the House of Commons at its next meeting, informed sources said today.

London members were said to be anxious for full discussion of problems of the city's hardest hit areas.

Henceforth, it has been made known, there will be no advance announcement of the hour, or even day, of Parliament's meetings. This secrecy is imposed for "security reasons," it was said.

Nazi Women Asked To Cut Down Smoking

Copyright by New York Times

Cigarette smokers in Germany are having an unpleasant time, according to reports to the office of Foreign Agricultural Relations.

On one hand it is stated that the German women-students' organization has asked its members to reduce smoking or give it up entirely for the duration of the war, so that the army shall have more. On the other hand, it is asserted, Germany has removed for the duration of the war, the ban against selling single cigarettes in stores which do not have small packages containing three to twelve cigarettes.

The German tobacco control board is said to be about to take over approximately 15,000,000 pounds of unsold tobacco held in the Netherlands.

Copyright by New York Times

London, Sept. 16.—The ministry of home security disclosed tonight that the Tate Gallery and two additional hospitals were damaged by bombs in recent German raids over London. The extent of the damage to the Tate Gallery, however, is not known, though exhibitions have been held there since the start of the war.

Both hospitals were hit during early hours of this morning but the patients in all cases were either in shelters or in parts of the hospitals which were undamaged. The casualties were few. Another hospital was hit during the night in a northwest town where more than 300 people left their shelters to help evacuate the patients.

Vichy, Sept. 16.—That a French fighter plane brought down a British seaplane off the coast of Morocco two days ago was officially confirmed here this evening. The seaplane, it is explained, was flying over territorial waters off Casa Blanca when it was seen by a French machine "engaged in a practice fight over the city."

HAY FEVER and ASTHMA

Science has not yet found a preparation which will give relief to all hay fever and asthma sufferers. This is understandable when one realizes that both of these conditions can be caused by many things, such as various pollens from flowers and weeds, perfumes, animal hairs, improper diet, etc. However, science has discovered that many cases of hay fever and asthma get amazing relief from the administration of a certain vital food element. Allergen, a rich source of this important element, gives relief to thousands of sufferers year in and year out. In fact, if Allergen is taken early enough, hay fever and asthma can often be prevented. Allergen is put up in inexpensive, easy-to-take tablets. Trial size, 30c; regular size, $1.00; economy, $2.00.

Domestic Relations Commissioner Urged

Plan Provides For Investigations By Court Officials

How a domestic relations commissioner could help the District Court improve its handling of personal law suits was discussed yesterday at a meeting called by Justices Bolitha J. Laws and James M. Proctor.

The plan, which provides an impartial court official to investigate the facts of alimony, child custody and similar disputes, has been successful in several western cities. Measures by which it could be adopted here were examined at the meeting by spokesmen of the District and Women's Bar Associations, the Juvenile Court, the Department of Justice and several interested attorneys.

Justice Proctor, who presided, advocated establishment of such an agency in an address to the District Bar Association last autumn. He renewed his support yesterday. Justice Laws and Assistant Clerk Phillips M. Hamilton, who performed some of the duties of a commissioner here this summer, recently completed a first-hand study of the system in Detroit, Cleveland and Chicago.

Commissioner Would Investigate

Justice Laws suggested that the District Court could, by adopting suitable rules, provide for reference to a commissioner of all disputes over alimony, child custody and the like. The Commissioner would make his own investigation and report directly to the court hearing the case.

A number of such cases were handled in this manner by Clerk Hamilton during the summer, with the consent of the disputants, and attorneys assured Justices Laws and James W. Morris that they were well pleased. On a number of occasions, attorneys for both sides asked Justice Morris to attempt a decision through an investigation by Hamilton rather than proceed to a formal hearing.

Justice Laws suggested that it would be well to have the same justice handle these cases throughout the court year and later turn from his subsequent duties long enough to dispose of new questions arising in cases that were before him.

Those at the meeting were asked to study the advisability of having alimony paid to the clerk of the court, who would remit it to the wife entitled to it, as is done in some Western cities and in many cases in the Juvenile Court here.

Change in Court Order Form

Justice Laws suggested that changing the form of some types of court orders also would contribute to success of the proposed system. One such revised order was introduced by Justice Laws this summer, to cut down the number of hearings required when husbands were delinuent in their alimony.

The discussions of the proposed commissioner system are being followed closely by Henry P. Chandler, administrative officer of the United States Courts, who authorized the survey made by Hamilton and Justice Laws.

Those at the meeting yesterday included H. Winship Wheatley, chairman of the District Bar Association committee to study the commissioner plan; Sefton Darr, former president of the Bar Association; Lawrence Koenigsberger, George Monk, Al Philip Kane, former District Attorney Leslie C. Garnett, Raymond Neudecker, Jean Boardman, Hyman Goldstein, James C. Wilkes, Lew Shapiro, Gilbert Hall, Guy Mason, Alexander Holtzoff, Assistant Attorney General; Brice Claggett, Mrs. Elizabeth M. Cox, Miss Ernest Parkinson and Mrs. Cecil Roeder, of the Women's Bar Association; Miss Genevieve Gabower of the Juvenile Court staff; J. H. Chessin, Clerk Hamilton, Justices Proctor and Laws, and Mrs. Gertrude Cave, Justice Laws' secretary.

Capital News In Brief

Final Work to Begin On Marine Memorial

Final construction work to complete the long-unfinished Navy and Marine Memorial on Columbia Island will begin this week, F. E. Gillen, acting superintendent of the National Capital Parks, announced yesterday.

The project, which will be financed with $39,000 of WPA funds, may be completed in December, Gillen said.

The base of the memorial, which depicts seagulls in flight over a breaking wave, will be sodded and a spiral ram of stone will be built to lead up to the level of the memorial proper. There will also be two flagstone step approaches.

Counterfeit Bill Passed at Drug Store

A clerk in People's Drug Store at 1542 North Capitol street suspected a $10 bill handed to him yesterday as being counterfeit, but the bill's passer slipped out of the store before police could be called.

Clerk Joseph Holloway, of 805 Massachusetts avenue northeast, told the "tall, dark colored man" who purchased some toilet articles with the note that he had to get it changed in the back room. There, he summoned the manager, but while they were conferring the customer disappeared—without his change.

Secret Service men confirmed the clerk's suspicion that the bill was spurious.

Man Bleeds to Death After Fall Downstairs

James H. Gray, colored, 42, was found dead at the foot of a flight of stairs yesterday at his home, 915 W street northwest, his head through a glass front door. An Emergency Hospital ambulance surgeon said death was due to loss of blood from a severed artery in his chin.

Police said Gray apparently had fallen down the stairs, his head shattering the glass, a fragment of which inflicted the fatal cut on his chin. He was found by Mrs. Lillian Gordon, of 907 W street.

Fitting Welcome for a Boy Scout Returning Home

WELCOME HOME, BOY SCOUT!—Mrs. Ruth Throckmore, of 1767 Q street northwest, had a kiss for her son, Jack, when he returned to Washington yesterday with 300 Boy Scouts from the District, Virginia and Maryland. They had been encamped with the Boy Scouts Service contingent at the New York World's Fair

P.-T.A. Board Joins Campaign To Rid District of Rats

City Has No Specific Rodent Control Law, Lacks Appropriations for Service, Health Department Inquiries Reveal

"Look at all those squirrels playing near the garage."

"They aren't squirrels, my dear, they're rats."

Mrs. Lawrence Brooks, a member of the board of the District Congress of Parents and Teachers, was returning home with her husband a few nights ago, and discovered that all the strange scenes were not those she had seen in the movie. The alley behind their house at Fifteenth street and Spring place northwest was alive with the rodents.

Her experience is only one of those responsible for the decision of the P.-T. A. board last week to bring rodent infestation to the attention of the District Health Officer, Dr. George C. Ruhland., and William A. Xanten, superintendent of the Refuse Department.

Mrs. Edward R. Seal, Eighteenth and Newton streets northwest, said rats were burrowing beneath the floor of the garage at her residence and that the neighbors who had gardens complained they were digging there and eating roots of plants.

Board members from other sections of the city told similar rat stories. One woman encountered a rat on the sidewalk while waiting for a bus at the corner of twelfth and E streets northwest.

Inquiries at the District Health Department yesterday revealed that there is no specific rodent control law in the District and there are no appropriations for this service. Dr. Ruhland said that if the department were provided with enough inspectors, one could be detailed to rodent control but at present other phases of health work were considered more imperative.

J. Frank Butts, director of the Bureau of Sanitary Inspection, said there had not been an excessive number of complaints of rats this season. When complaints are made an inspection of the immediate location and adjacent premises is ordered and recommendations are made for the removal of old lumber or refuse where rats would be harbored or would breed. Red Squill is the poison recommended by the bureau for eradicating them.

The Bureau of Sanitary Inspection has no authority to order refuse moved, but in case it constitutes a fire hazard reports to the Fire Department, which has such authority.

Xanten, of the refuse department, said when a rodent campaign was carried on as an emergency relief project several years ago, at the time of the razing of the old Center Market, more than 50,000 rats were exterminated.

Community Chest and Evening Meeting Groups Receive Decorations From Morris For Outstanding Service Last Year

Two plaques for outstanding service last year were presented to two of its committees by the Junior Chamber of Commerce at its annual meeting at the Hotel Annapolis last night. A. Z. Wood presided.

The first plaque, for the "project of greatest value to the District of Columbia," was presented to Samuel Kaufman, chairman of the Community Chest Committee. In making the presentation, Edgar Morris, chairman of the Greater National Capital Committee, pointed out that the Junior Chamber team was the one to go over its quota in the last Chest drive.

Austin P. DeWilde, chairman of the evening meetings committee, received a similar plaque from Robert W. Wilson, first president of the chamber, for greatest service to the organization. The first plaque was offered by the Washington Board of Trade, the second by the Junior Chamber.

Judges were James E. Colliflower, Board of Trade president; Lee D. Butler, and Morris.

High Schools To Boost Cadet Corps

Principals Meet Today to Arouse Student Interest In Military Unit

Principals of Washington's public high schools will meet today with Dr. Chester W. Holmes, assistant superintendent of schools, to consider means of increasing student interest in the school military training program.

Contrary to reports, Dr. Holmes and Col. Wallace M. Craigie, professor of military science and tactics, last night denied school authorities have any intention of taking any steps to make enrollment in the High School Cadet Corps compulsory.

One means of awakening interest in the cadet corps, if the proposal is acceptable to the principals, might be to conduct a cadet rally to call the attention of students to the "desirability of military training in these times which, conceivably, may become even more critical by the time these boys reach draft age."

Uniforms on Installment

Another method by which the corps might be made attractive to a greater number of students, Dr. Holmes said, might be to arrange, if possible, with the manufacturers to have cadet uniforms, which sell for $20 for privates, bought in installments.

No consideration is now being given, Dr. Holmes said, to intensification of the present three-hours-per-week course now being given in the high schools, principally because of the possibility of a shortage of military instructors. Several of the instructors are Reserve Army officers, Dr. Holmes stated, and one of them already has been called to active duty with others likely to be summoned.

Military training in Washington schools was provided by Congress in 1907 in legislation requiring all male students to participate unless excused by a physician or at request of parents. It has been the policy of the school administration to excuse all students whose parents do not approve of the training without requiring them to state reasons.

Hopes for 50 Per Cent Increase

Dr. Holmes said he hopes the corps may be increased by 50 per cent. Last year's enrollment was 2,033 in the white schools and 650 in the colored schools.

The move to strengthen the corps last night received the backing of Mrs. C. D. Lowe, president of the District Congress of Parents and Teachers.

"Personally," she said, "I am highly in favor of military training in the schools, particularly at the present time."

Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, president of the Board of Education, said she believed the military training program "excellent," and forecast increased student interest in the corps as parents, in view of passage of the draft law, will be glad to have their sons receive instruction.

Md. Man Killed, 3 Seriously Hurt In Area Traffic

A Maryland man was killed and three Washington residents seriously injured yesterday in traffic accidents in and near the city.

Phillip H. Budd, 40, of Sheppard Heights, Md., injured about 5 a. m. in a crash on North Beach road, died shortly before last midnight in Casualty Hospital here.

Ross Payne, 25, of 226 Ninth street southeast, received a brain concussion and chest injuries when his motorcycle skidded at Tenth and D streets southwest and he was thrown to the pavement. He was taken to Casualty Hospital.

Crossing Massachusetts avenue at Third street northwest, Thomas Gaffney, 67, of the Commodore Hotel, suffered a possible fracture of the skull, a possible brain concussion and severe scalp lacerations when struck by an automobile. He was also taken to Casualty Hospital.

Homer Marsh, 40, of 116 Sixteenth street southeast, was treated at Georgetown Hospital for head injuries suffered in an accident near Bethesda, Md.

College Urges Freshmen Join Church Cadets

Dr. Benjamin G. Wilkinson, president of Washington Missionary College, yesterday urged male members of the freshman class to join the medical cadet corps of the Seventh Day Adventist Church in order that they may be prepared to aid in national defense.

The medical cadet corps, organized last February by the Seventh Day Adventists, who are conscientiously opposed to bearing arms, has a Washington enrollment of about 300. The enrollees range from 17 to 60 years of age.

To the girls in the freshman class, Dr. Wilkinson advised that they train for teaching. He said there was a great need for teachers in the elementary field.

Dr. Wilkinson spoke before the general assembly of the college at the beginning of its thirty-sixth year.

Sixteenth St. Heights Citizens Reelect Cairns

Association Opposes Change in Zoning Rules For Religiuos Group

M. J. Cairns was reelected president of the Sixteenth Street Heights Citizens Association last night at the first meeting of the season held at the Shepherd School, Fourteenth and Jonquil streets northwest.

Harry C. Hensley was elected vice president; Joseph H. Wilson, treasurer; G. Mallet Prevost, secretary, and Robert Barry, financial secereteary. Elected delegates to the Federation were L. D. O'Flaherty and Mrs. H. M. Phillips.

The group went on record in opposition to the proposed change in the zoning regulations permitting residential A, restricted A, semi-restricted A, and B restricted areas in the District to be sites for convents, monasteries, houses of religious studies, or residences of religious communities. It was stated that the Congregation of the Holy Ghost and the Immaculate Heart of Mary, Inc., "an organization running colleges throughout the world," was seeking to locate its headquarters at 1615 Manchester lane northwest.

A resoluion also was adopted in opposition to alcoholic beverage licenses being issued to establishments within 600 feet of schools and churches.

Lincoln Civic

E. F. Harris was elected to his fifth term as president of the Lincoln Civic Association at a meeting last night in the Francis Junior High School.

Other officers chosen were Mrs. Rosetta T. Dutch, vice president; William H. Schields, secretary; Mrs. Sarah T. Honesty, assistant secretary; DeWitt Long, treasurer, and Rudolph Berrell, chaplain.

The president, secretary and Dean George A. Parker, Dr. Henry Heath and Mrs. Edna W. Peyton were named delegates to the Federation of Civic Associations.

The organization voted to ask the National Park Service to remove "immediately" a huge dirt pile occupying a portion of the junior high school playground. The earth was accumulated during excavation operations for the Rock Creek sewer.

200 Honor Couple At Second Baptist Church Celebration

"This could only happen in America," said 70-year-old John J. Scheuring last night after repeating marriage vows with his wife, Mrs. Jennie Scheuring, in ceremonies celebrating their golden wedding anniversary at the Second Baptist Church, Seventeenth and East Capitol streets.

More than 200 friends and fellow church members saw the Rev. J. Ray Garrett, pastor of the church, perform the full marriage ceremony for the couple, who were married in Washington 50 years ago. Scheuring, retired from the hotel business, was born in Bavaria, while his wife is a native of Fredericksburg, Va. Their home is at 1004 Ninth street southeast.

Charles Buck, of Arlington, Va., who was best man at the couple's marriage in 1890, acted in the same capacity at last night's ceremony. Mrs. H. O. Davis, of 400 Ninth street southeast, was the maid of honor.

Scheuring's impromptu statement followed the ceremony when he turned with tears in his eyes to thank friends for their kindness. In brief words he said that such thoughtfulness on the part of friends could not happen in his native Germany. He said he was "glad to be an American."

Mr. and Mrs. Scheuring were presented a great cardboard wedding ring in the center of which were placed the numerals, "50," containing a gift of $50 from friends in the church. Jesse D. Nolph made the presentation.

A bouquet of gladioli was presented by the church to the Rev. and Mrs. Garrett in honor of their eighth wedding anniversary, also celebrated yesterday. A buffet supper served by women of the church followed.

Justice Wheat Upholds 180-Day Drunk Sentence

Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat of the District Court yesterday upheld the authority of the Police Court to sentence a man to 180 days in jail for drunkenness.

Chief Justice Wheat dismissed the habeas corpus petition of Fred Posten, 35, a barber, who asserted that Judge George Neilson exceeded his authority by imposing the 180-day sentence.

Assistant Corporation Counsel Matt Horner told the chief justice, that Nilson could have given Posten as much as a year, under the law.

Part-Time Jobs of U. S. Workers Hit

Central Labor Union Asks A. F. L to Seek Congressional Ban

The Central Labor Union, council of A. F. of L. locals here, last night initiated a move to prevent Government employes working outside at part-time jobs.

The resolution, which called on the A. F. of L. to seek remedial legislation in Congress, specifically mentioned part-time jobs as retail clerks in Washington stores, but it was indicated that Government workers using their spare time as cab drivers and bartenders would be included in the proposed ban.

Union officials would not estimate the number of Government clerks involved, but said many Federal employes sought and obtained the extra work during Saturdays, vacation periods and even sick leave.

Coyne Apology Demanded

The resolution calling for preventive legislation declared that Government employes had "the best of working conditions, as to hours, wages and leave . . . conditions which make outside employment unnecessary and detrimental to the unemployed." The part-time jobs, the resolution warned, had an injurious effect on the fight for the 5-day 30-hour week.

The delegates, in a second resolution, demanded that John Coyne, president of the A. F. of L. Building Trades Department, apologize for his charge that District building union officials were "irresponsible" in dealing with a jurisdictional strike which tied up work for several days on the Social Security Building last month. The Washington Building Trades Council leaders were given a vote of confidence.

Tribute to Bankhead

Coyne blamed the Building Trades Council here for what he termed an "epidemic of strikes over jurisdictional disputes," following the settlement of strike growing out of a dispute between plasterers and carpenters. In the past year, there had been several other such inter-union controversy walkouts.

Local labor officials asserted last night that work tieups were the fault of Coyne, who, as head of the Building Trades Department, had the power to settle jurisdictional disputes.

Before adjourning last night, the delegates rose for a minute's silence as a tribute to the late Speaker of the House Bankhead.

Jones Hits Poll Tax

John T. Jones, director of Labor's Non-Partisan League, speaking before the Industrial Union Council, last night predicted that Washington would not get the vote until the poll tax was eliminated over the country.

"There will be no real interest in advancing democracy until minority poll tax Congressmen are replaced by true representatives," he told delegates to the District C. I. O.

Jones charged that more than 1,500 lives had been needlessly lost in the past year and a half, through Congress' failure to pass the proposed mine safety bill, which would place all mines under Federal inspection, instead of the present "faulty and politically influenced," State inspection.

Charles Duke, chairman of the housing committee, reported that the Industrial Union Council would sponsor a housing conference here September 25.

Tigers Top Nats; Indians Split; Yanks Blasted

Detroit Beats Nats Behind Newsom, 9-2

Buck Revels in 5-Hit Game, Coming Back With One Day's Rest To Win 19th Game

By Shirley Povich
Post Staff Writer

Detroit, Sept. 16.—Grinning Buck Newsom, reveling in the helplessness of the Nats against his five-hit pitching, lifted the Detroit Tigers full into the thick of the pennant race today with his nineteenth victory of the season.

Newsom coasted to a 9-2 triumph over the Nats after his Tiger pals had handed him a 6-0 lead in the first three innings. Joe Krakauskas who started for the Nats was (1) wild (2) ineffective and (3) pretty awful.

Chagrined by his defeat by the Yankees on Saturday after holding a 4-0 lead, Big Newsom asked for today's pitching job despite only one day's rest and promised to redeem himself. He did. He had the Nats whiffing at his fast ball and lunging off balance against his special crowd-pleasing change of pace that drooped over the plate from 20 feet in the air.

Tigers Move Up

The Tigers thus drew to within a half game of the league-leading Indians who were splitting a doubleheader with the Athletics. Coincidentally, the Yankees and White Sox were virtually removed as pennant threats by defeats they encountered today.

The standing of the leaders as of tonight:

Team.	W.	L.	GB.	To Pl.
Cleveland	82	60	...	12
Detroit	81	60	½	13
New York	77	63	4	14
Chicago	78	65	4½	11

Newsom show-boated all over the premises for the entertainment of the crowd of 3,911. With a commanding lead, he swaggered and strutted on the mound and enjoyed himself hugely. It wasn't until the seventh inning that the Nats made their second hit—a single by Buddy Lewis, whose fourth-inning double had been the only previous Washington blow.

The Tigers had the help of George Case in their assaults on Krakauskas, but Case's two unpardonable errors on ground balls that skipped through his legs to the centerfield fence could not obscure the pathetic performance of Krakky.

Hank Bangs Thirty-fifth

Hank Greenberg took advantage of the presence of Joe Haynes in the box to tie Jimmy Foxx for the league's home-run leadership, belting his thirty-fifth homer of the year into the leftfield stands with a man on base in the sixth.

The Tigers launched their 11-hit attack on Krakky and Haynes in the second inning, after two were out. Fox drew a pass and Tebbetts and Newsom singled to center. Tebbetts scored with the second run of the inning when Newsom's single escaped Case and rolled to the fence.

It was four runs for the Tigers in the third, on four hits, a base on balls, a pass and a duplicate of Caes's second-inning misplay. McCoskey opened the inning with a triple to center, Gehringer walked, Greenberg singled to center, York doubled to right and Fox singled to right.

Haynes Goes In

That made it 6-0 and Haynes took up the pitching in the fourth. Two innings later McCosky hit his second triple of the game, Gehringer singled and Greenberg checked in with his homer and the score was 9-0.

The Nats packed three of their five hits into the seventh—their only run scoring inning. Lewis led off with a single to center, and with two out, Bloodworth doubled to left and Sanford singled through the box, the rally falling only seven runs short of tying the score.

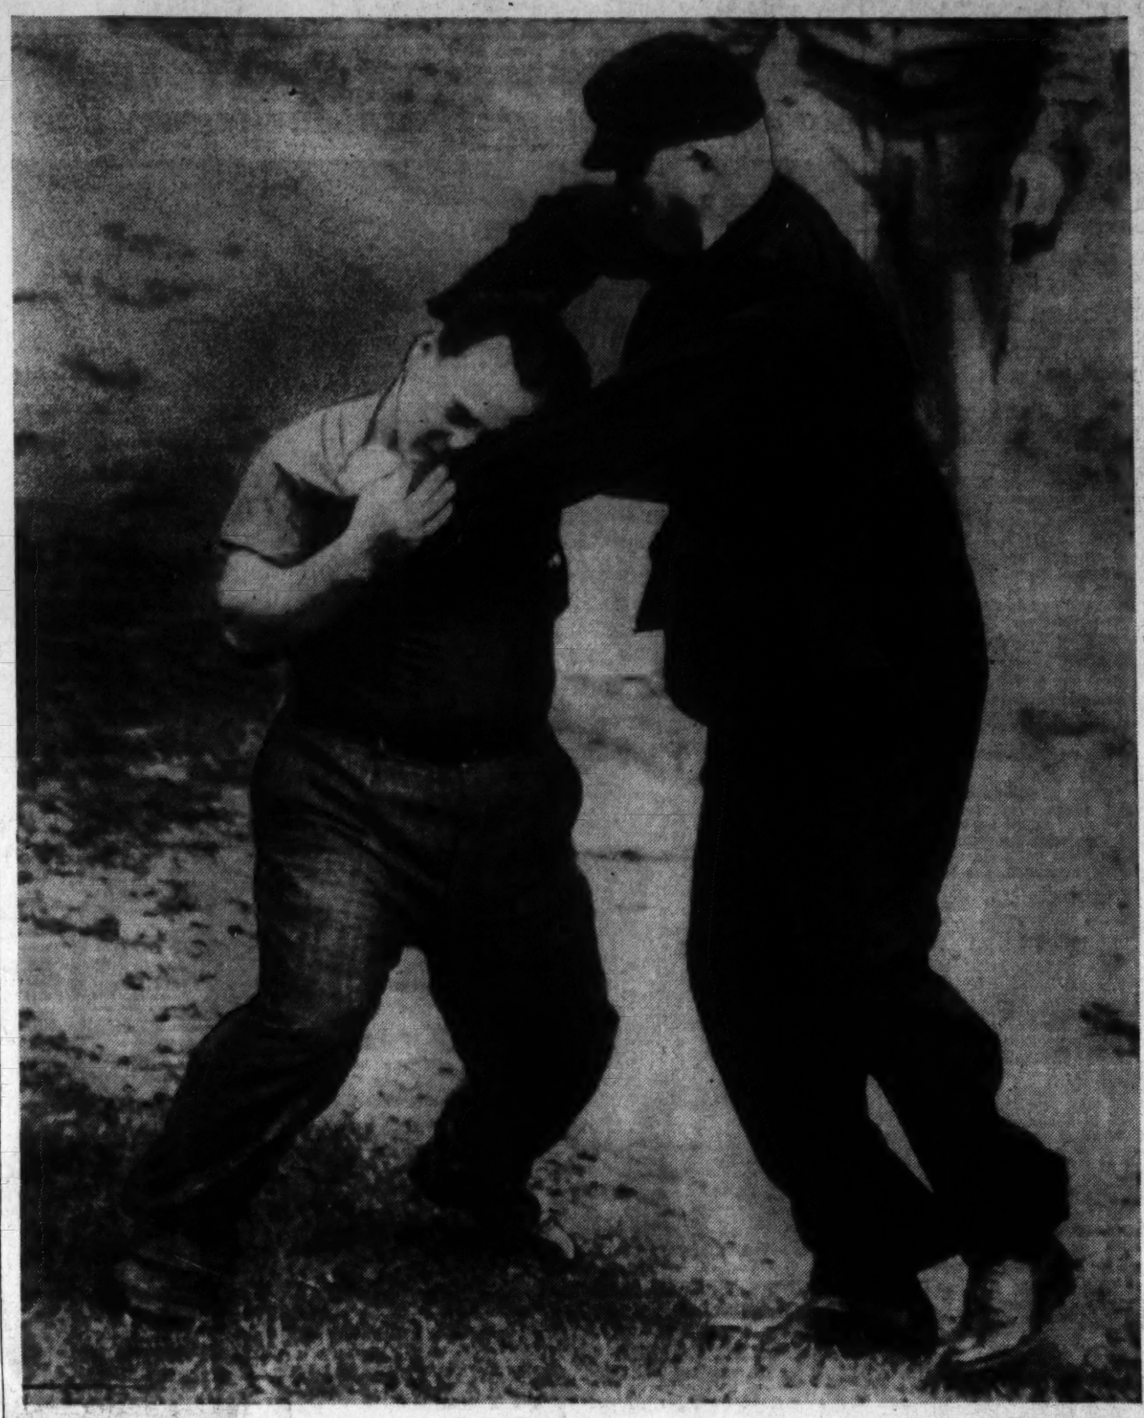
Hell Hath No Fury Like Irate Dodger Fan



Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Irate over a decision reversal by Umpire George Magerkurth in tenth inning of Brooklyn-Cincinnati game yesterday at Brooklyn, this husky Dodger fan rushed onto the field after the game and tangled with Magerkurth. Though he stands nearly 6 feet 6 and weighs close to 250 pounds, Magerkurth was reported to have taken a bad beating before rescued. (For details of disputed decision see story.)

Jenkins Beats Montgomery In Close Bout

15,000 See Texan Get Off Floor to Preserve Fistic Reputation

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 16.—Lightweight Champion Lew Jenkins, with his fistic career "on the spot," rallied in the last round tonight to win a ten-round decision over Bob Montgomery, local Negro youngster, before a crowd of 15,000 in Shibe Park. Jenkins weighed 135; Montgomery, 137.

The slim Texan got up off the floor to do it, however. Montgomery, who fought out of a half crouch and battled somewhat on the style of Henry Armstrong, dropped Jenkins in the third round for a nine-count, cut his left eye in the same heat, and generally worked on that eye the rest of the way.

It was a dead-close fight, with Jenkins, after taking the early rounds, slowing from the seventh through the ninth, and then coming on again with a smashing right-hand body attack in the tenth. On the Associated Press score card, each fighter won five rounds.

Jenkins Starts Strong

The Texan, recognized in California, New York, and this State as the 135-pound boss, took the first two rounds easily, although somewhat baffled by Montgomery's crouching, crowding tactics.

Lew might have made it more one-sided all the way if he had pitched his right hand shots at Montgomery's mid-section more often instead of aiming at the head, which was an elusive and well protected target.

In the third, Montgomery suddenly came up out of his crouch and "hung" a right hand bomb right on Jenkins' chin. Lew went down near a neutral corner, got up at nine, and spent the rest of the heat backtracking from the fast-charging Bob. The same punch that put Lew down cut his left eye and scraped his cheek, and several times the rest of the way Montgomery opened the cut again.

Texan Tires

Jenkins, clearly ahead at the end of the sixth, suddenly tired in the seventh and for that round and the next two Montgomery had all the better of it.

Jenkins' next stop probably will be in defense of his crown in New York.

The crowd contributed to a gross gate of $24,000.

Junior Loses Title

New Haven, Conn., Sept. 16 (INS). Julie Kogan, New Haven, tonight dethroned Paul Junior, of Lewiston, Me., as New England lightweight champion by pounding out a 10-round decision over Junior.

Kogan weighed 136, Junior 138.

Umpire Magerkurth Attacked as Reds Win

By the Associated Press

Brooklyn, Sept. 16.—The Cincinnati Reds came close to clinching their second successive National League pennant today by downing the Brooklyn Dodgers, 4 to 3, in ten innings with the help of a disputed play that caused an attack on Umpire George Magerkruth after the game.

After the Reds rallied to tie the score in the ninth with one run, they loaded the bases with one out in the tenth on Mike McCormick's double, a walk to Ival Goodman and an error by Pete Coscarat which caused all the trouble.

Frank McCormick grounded to shortstop and Johnny Hudson threw to Coscarat, who dropped the ball while pivoting to throw to first in a doubleplay attempt. Umpire Bill Stewart called Goodman out, but appealed to Magerkurth near third base when Manager Bill McKechnie and the Reds protested vociferously.

Magerkurth ruled Goodman was safe, filling the bases, and his decision stood in spite of a vocal storm from the Dodgers which ended only with the banishment of Manager Leo Durocher from the field.

After the game hundreds of the 6,782 fans swarmed onto the field. One of them shook Magerkruth's hand, but another rushed up and started a fist fight. The towering umpire, at least 6 feet 3 inches tall and weighing probably 225 pounds, was knocked to the ground and pounded by his smaller foe until the other umpires and uniformed ushers rushed to his aid.

Other fans became involved in numerous scattered arguments and light fighting with ushers and other spectators, but order was restored after police arrested Magerkruth's assailant.

The victory for Cincinnati was credited to Relief Pitcher Joe Beggs, his ninth straight, and gave the Reds a margin of 10 games over the second-place Dodgers. In the records it was listed as the playoff of a 1-1 tie the two teams staged yesterday and made the Reds' fourteenth decision over Brooklyn in 22 games this season.

Gene Thompson, who started on the mound for the Reds, gave up

Patty Berg's 75 WinsOregon Medal

Portland, Oreg., Sept. 16 (AP).—Patty Berg, of Minneapolis, led early finishers in the Oregon Women's Invitational Open Golf Tournament at Waverley Country Club today.

The former National Women's Amateur champion, who recently turned professional, carded a 75 in the 18-hole, one-day tournament.

Other top-flight early finishers among the 95 women entered were Jean Cline, Bloomington, Ill., 79; Ellamae Williams, Chicago, 80, and Opal Hill, Kansas City professional, 82. Marion Miley, of Lexington, Ky., finalist in the Western Championship, finished but did not turn in her score.

Dodger President Challenges Yanks To Title Series

By the Associated Press

Brooklyn, Sept. 16. — President Larry MacPhail of the Brooklyn Dodgers today challenged the New York Yankees to a post-season series for the championship of greater New York.

He sent a letter to President Ed Barrow of the Yankees proposing the series in the event the world champs missed the pennant and pointing out that the Dodgers had defeated New York's other major league entry, the Giants, in 14 out of 19 games already this season.

The Dodgers suggested playing the first two games in their own Ebbets Field, with the second at night. The series would start on the same day as the World Series and like the Chicago intra-city competition of the Cubs and White Sox, would be under the supervision of Commissioner Kenesaw M. Landis.

Barrow, reached at his home tonight, said he had not yet received MacPhail's letter and had no comment, except:

"We're not out of that other race yet. In due time I'll answer him yes or no."

Mead to Defy N. Y. Boxing Commission

Armstrong-Furr Bout Set for 15 Rds. After Meeting Here

The District Boxing Commission, seconded by the National Boxing Commission, finally won a round yesterday in its battle with Promoter Mike Jacobs and the New York Athletic Commission as it was definitely decided that the Phil Farr-Henry Armstrong fight here Monday night will be a 15-round affair for the world welterweight title.

Faced with suspension and the loss of a $2,500 guarantee that Armstrong would make his next title defense in New York, Eddie Mead, manager of the 147-pound champion, wired Jacobs and Gen. John J. Phelan in New York that he had no other alternative than to go through with the Washington fight.

The decision followed a two-hour session of wrangling and general confusion in the local commission offices, where Fat Eddie was pleading for a 12-round maximum.

Can't Run Out

Mead gently reminded the New York officials that the fight here is for charity and that he cannot possibly run out. He also mentioned that after the Furr fight, Armstrong will stand ready to fill his October 4 championship engagement in Madison Square Garden against Fritzie Zivic.

Mead met with Boxing Commissioners Claude Owen, Ernest W. Brown and Thomas P. Morgan, jr., and with officials of the Variety

St. Louis Pounds 5 Homers, Chases Russo in First as Champs Sink Lower

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Sept. 16.—The St. Louis Browns slaughtered the New York Yankees 16-to-4 today as the World Champions came apart at the seams and sank farther from the American League pennant crest.

The giant-killing Brownies blasted Marius Russo out of the box in the first inning in the midst of a seven-run explosion and continued their bombardment against Bump Hadley, Lefty Gomez and Steve Sundra.

Altogether St. Louis 15 hits, one-third of them home runs. Rookie Johnny Lucadello accounted for one in the first and another with one on in the seventh. Rip Radcliff got one in the first, George McQuinn one with a runner on in the second and Chet Laabs one in the third.

The defeat dropped New York

Cleveland's League Lead Cut to Half Game; Babich Wins Nightcap

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Sept. 16.—Connie Mack's Athletics wound the torrid American League flag chase into a tighter knot today, snapping a nine-game losing streak to split a washday bargain bill with the league-leading Indians. The standoff cost Cleveland half its one-game advantage over Detroit.

The Tribe, with Mel Harder retiring the first 20 batters in order, smashed Philadelphia in the opener, 8 to 3. Johnny Babich's six-hit twirling was too much for the Indians in the nightcap and the Athletics squeezed out a 3 to 2 triumph.

About 6,000 Cleveland stadium customers saw the Indians unleash their war clubs on Lee (Buck) Ross, an old jinx, for an easy win in the first game.

Harder Opens Rally

Harder started things with a single and before the fat third inning was ended, seven men had scored. The dynamite blow was Ray Mack's inside-the-park homer with the bases clogged. Jeff Heath contributed another the next inning with nobody on.

Harder, meanwhile, was headed for a perfect game until Catcher Frankie Hayes, with two men down in the seventh, smacked a single into leftfield. Heath might have caught it, but played the blow safe despite Cleveland's 8-0 advantage. With the pressure off, Harder was touched for three futile tallies in the ninth.

By then, the Athletics resembled nothing more than a wornout doormat. They had dropped nine straight contests—three of them to Cleveland.

Babich Wins 13th

Babich, turning in his thirteenth win, was too tough in the nightcap, however. The clubs entered the ninth deadlocked, 2 to 2, because Harry Eisenstat, unlucky Indian southpaw, gave Sam Chapman and Hayes home-run pitches.

Chapman led off by socking a 3-and-2 pitch over the third-base sack for a freak double. Ken Keltner stabbed at the slow roller but missed it. Then Bob Johnson bounced a ball, which hit Eisenstat's glove and continued into centerfield for another double, plating Chapman with the winning run.

It was sweet retribution for the Athletics' round ace for he had dropped two 1-to-0 games to Cleveland this season. Ross was less fortunate. Three of his five triumphs had been against the Indians.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Detroit, Sept. 16.—The American League's philosophy of baseball was stoutly defended by that ranking new world philosopher, Mr. Bobo Newsom of the Detroit Tigers in debate today with Mr. Rowdy Richard Bartell, a leading National League thinker of the old school.

POVICH

"You shoulda made the play at home, you lug, ya," bellowed Mr. Bartell sweetly. "Never give 'em the tying run. You'd know that, Newsom, if you had the brains you were born with."

Mr. Newsom stiffened. "Now how do you like that?" He asked an audience of Detroit and Washington players and baseball writers. "Muss my hair and call me Willkie if Bartell ain't blown his topper. Ya can't make the play at home and be smart. It's gotta be done like I did it."

For six days in the Detroit dressing room, in the dug-out, on the field, the pair had been arguing the play. It had occurred during the recent Detroit-Red Sox series. We herewith reconstruct:

It was the fifth inning. Ted Williams was on third base, Joe Cronin on first, none out and Newsom pitching. The score was 3 to 2 in favor of the Tigers and Bobby Doerr was at bat. Doerr bounced a pitch into the box to Newsom. Bobo took a fleeting look at Williams dashing to the plate and then wheeled and threw to second to start a double play, Williams scoring. Newsom retired the next batter and got out of the inning with only one run damage.

"Yeah, and if you'd a-cut that run off at the plate instead of trying for a double play, we'd never have been licked in 13 innings," said Bartell. "Make 'em hit in that tying run. Never give it to 'em."

Newsom spat his cigarette the full length of the room. "They may have taught you that in the National League, Bartell, but you're in the big leagues now. No wonder the National League always gets bumped off in the World Series—playing that kind of baseball. You can't get beat as long as they've only got the tying run. Don't forget we were the home team, and we had one more chance than Boston did to break the tie."

Bartell snorted. "You couldn't play ball for Bill Terry or Gabby Hartnett, Bobo if you let any club have the tying run. They're a couple of pretty sound baseball men and they wouldn't put up with any foolishness like ignoring the tying run."

"Nothing but National League stuff," countered Newsom, "We don't live or die by one run in this league. We always figure on breaking up that big inning a team might get. I wasn't so dumb. If I threw to the plate, Williams makes us run him down, and by that time Cronin is probably on third and Doerr gets to second, with only one out. If that happens, a hit is apt to ruin us. They might get four or five runs. We play big league ball in this league, Bartell."

Phooey was written all over Bartell's face as he listened to Newsom. "Yeah," he said, "and suppose you throw that ball wild trying for a double play. That can always happen when you try to do it the hard way. Where are you then? You're a gone duck." Bobo refused to entertain that possibility. "I don't make no wild throws," he said.

Earlier in the week, Newsom and Bartell had submitted their argument to Manager Joe McCarthy, here with the Yankees. They got an answer in two parts from McCarthy who had pennant winning teams in both leagues. "You were right," Newsom said McCarthy and then turning to Bartell, he added "and so were you.

"When I was in the National League, we'd never give 'em the tying run," said McCarthy. "In that league, runs are too hard to get. But in this league they come easier. If you can stop a big inning by giving 'em the tying run, that's what you have to do. Especially, if it's only the fifth inning. Any time before the seventh, it doesn't matter much. After that, of course ,you can't afford to let 'em get that tying run."

"What did I tell you," shouted Newsom gleefully to Bartell.

"You heard the man," said Bartell. "He backed up what I said. Anyway, you ain't so smart. That run you give the Red Sox turned out to be the run that beat us. This league I'm in now could use a little more National League brains, besides my own."

Williamson Presents 1940 Football Ratings

Grid System Has Perfect Day on Lean Saturday Card; Preliminary Ratings For 1940 Based on Season's Prospects

The Post herewith begins a series of football ratings compiled by the Williamson National Rating System which will continue each Tuesday and Friday mornings throughout the season exclusively in The Post in Washington.

By Paul B. Williamson

The 1940 football season was launched in fitting style Saturday when Moore Nelson, of St. Mary's of Texas, returned the opening kickoff 85 yards to a touchdown against Southeastern Louisiana College. That was the top thrill of a day of scant action in the minor circuits where the Williamson System picked every winner.

St. Mary's steamrollered Southeastern's Lions, 27-6; Rollins smothered West Carolina Teachers, and Youngstown College came through in a close one for the system to nose out Geneva, 7-0.

Scattered gridiron action will continue another week until most of the top-flight elevens open up Saturday the 28th. In the meantime it would be interesting to speculate on how the Nation's mighty college grid powers will fare during 1940. Which 1939 pace-setters are destined to tumble and which formerly low-ranked elevens will come roaring to the top.

Below are my first ratings for the season, preliminary ratings which were not altered by last week's games. These ratings were not calculated on 1939 performance but on prospects for the new season.

When the season is once underway the ratings will indicate a team's relative strength in comparison with its next scheduled opponent, but not always the strength of each team as compared with all others in the table. The final ratings of the completed season, however, should be close to a 100 per cent measure of strength of the respective teams. The percentage figures below (right hand column) are the most important. The listing figures (left hand column) are for convenience, although it is expected that at the end of the season the teams will finish in their true 1-2-3 order.

$10,000 Gold Cup, Safely in Hands Of Boat Officials

Rumors that the $10,000 gold cup won last year by Harold Wilson, 29-year-old Canadian who won the power boat event in the President's Cup Regatta, would not be returned to this country were brought to rest yesterday.

The cup is in the hands of customs officials in Washington and will be released to the President's Cup Regatta trophy committee in the next few days, Samual A. Cymes, chairman of the committe, said yesterday.

Par 68 by Courtney Litz Paces Public Links Qualifying

Jennings' 76, Suit's 70 Win Other Medals

Match Play Rounds Begin Next Monday; Champion Oliveri Is Among Qualifiers

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Only one player in a starting field of 130 was able to match par figures on any of the three public links courses yesterday as 32 players qualified for the match play rounds in the City Public Links Championship.

Courtney Litz, a regular member of the Anacostia Club, played the southeast course in 68 strokes, even par, to win medal honors there by a single shot over the favored W. W. Seay, and Harry Bragg.

Bobby Suit, a George Washington University student, topped the Rock Creek field by four strokes with a round of 70.

32 Start Monday

Medal honors at East Potomac went begging but Bill Jennings, a newcomer to the publinks tournament scene, finally came home with a four over par 76 to top the largest field of the day. Jennings went four over par on the last three holes and still won out.

The 32 qualifiers will swing into match play next Monday at East Potomac, with two rounds, the quarter-finals and semifinals Tuesday and the 36-hole finals Wednesday. Sixteen players qualified at East out of 55 while eight places were allotted the other courses with 43 entered at Anacostia and 32 at Rock Creek.

An eagle deuce by Litz on the par four sixteenth hole, where he holed an eight-iron approach shot, won the Anacostia medal. Back of Seay and Bragg, who posted 69s, were George Graham, son of Course Manager Harry Graham, and Acting Sergeant B. P. Campbell, of the police force. Four tied with 73s and will play off today for two places Cal Loving, R. G. Bowers, Joe Bauman and Harry Beinlich.

Oliveri Qualifies

Defending Champion Andy Oliveri was an easy qualifier at East Potomac with a pair of 39s for a 78 while John Jankowski and Roy Smith each equaled that figure. Ken Zent posted a 79 and Al Birmingham an 80.

Trailing Suit at Rock Creek was William Bailey with a 74, while Jack Holland posted a 79. Scores of 79 or better qualified. Pairings will be made today.

Knee Injury May Handicap Terps' Duvall

Junior Passing Star Out for at Least 10 Days; To Miss Game

By Jack Munhall.

Grave fears of certain Maryland football supporters that Mearle DuVall, a very promising triple-threat halfback, is brittle and probably will be handicapped throughout his grid career by injuries were strengthened yesterday.

Reports from College Park announced that the slim junior who is one of the best forward passers to enroll at College Park in many a season is shelved for at least ten days with a torn cartilage in his knee. Simultaneously it was revealed that the Terps have perhaps lost another dependable for their opening game with Hampden-Sydney, September 28, because end Dick Shaffer suffered a crack rib in a recent scrimmage with Catholic University.

Although Shaffer, too, may have to be withheld from scrimmages and other rough work for at least ten days, his hurt is causing little concern in comparison to DuVall's. For DuVall again seems to be dogged by the injury jinx that followed him most of last season, his first with the varsity.

Handicapped constantly by a bad knee which was aggravated in almost every game he played, DuVall did not begin to live up to the predictions that were made of him after his brilliant performances with the freshman team of the preceding year.

DuVall has been hobbling for several days and missed last Wednesday's scrimmage against Catholic University. The torn cartilage is in the same knee that was hurt last year and even if pessimistic opinion that he is brittle proves wrong, DuVall may still suffer football oblivion because of a "trick knee."

Trick knees are not uncommon in football and many a good player has been stopped short of greatness for that reason only. Maryland has such a player in camp now in Bob Smith, a truly fine center who last season missed about half Maryland's games because of a knee that continually was being whacked out of shape.

Maryland and Catholic University have another scrimmage scheduled today at 2:30 at College Park.

Hagerty Stresses Blocking at G. U.

Ragged blocking by his Georgetown University football gridmen in Saturday's intrasquad scrimmage caused Coach Hagerty to change training plans yesterday.

Hagerty had intended to drive ahead with contact work this week, but now he has decided to delay further scrimmaging until the blocking becomes more polished and effective.

With a scrimmage coming up with Navy Saturday when Hagerty will take the full 36-man squad to Annapolis, he is anxious to have the Hoyas' attack completely tuned.

Hagerty yesterday released a probable starting line-up for the Navy scrimmage. It listed John Lascari and either Mike Kopcik or Art Lemke at ends; Joe Daniels and Earl Fullilove at tackles; Mark Ostinato and Augie Lio at guards; Al Matuza, center; Joe McFadden, quarterback; Jules Koshlap and Lou Ghecas or Jack Spender, halfbacks, and Jim Castiglia, fullback.

Welsh Johnsen In Match Tonight

Gwynn King, new tennis professional at Kenwood Country Club and former District doubles champion, will stage an exhibition program tonight, featuring a singles match between District Champion Barney Welsh and young Davie Johnsen, Welsh's only local tournament conqueror in ten years.

The program will begin at 7:30 with the Johnsen-Welsh encounter, which will give Barney a chance to avenge his defeat by Johnsen in the finals of the 1939 Middle Atlantic Championships.

Redskins Start Workouts For Giants; Baugh Injured

Still uncertain as to just what he can expect from his Redskins this season, Coach Ray Flaherty this morning will start work for Sunday's date in the ball park with the New York Giants harried by the thought of Sammy Baugh's injured pitching wing.

While the majority of the Redskins came through the opening game with the Brooklyn Dodgers unscathed, Baugh turned up with a shoulder injury, which though thought to be minor nevertheless may slow the Texas passing expert down for a few days.

Trainer Ray (Doc) Mauro said there is no apparent injury to the bone and that the trouble is probably a bruised muscle received while executing a block.

The Redskins took a day off yesterday to rest up after their 24-17 victory over the Dodgers, and during the afternoon another problem cropped up.

It was discovered that over the week-end, the Skins' field house at Anacostia Park had been raided and that thieves had made off with $200 worth of equipment, including headgears, several new jerseys and pairs of shoes. Among the shoes stolen were the special pair worn by Andy Farkas, now recovering from a knee operation.

Speaking at the regular Monday luncheon of the Washington Football Writers Association yesterday, Flaherty said he was pleased with his team's play in the first half but emphasized his displeasure with the second-half letdown the Redskins suffered.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

Mr. Whiskers, the old gent with the goatee and the star-spangled suit, has very quietly grabbed the West Side Tennis Club by the vest and demanded a tax cut on the amateur tennis championships played annually at the club's stucco saucer at Forest Hills, N. Y.

CONSIDINE

The commissioner of internal revenue uttered a harsh laugh at the club's contention that it should come under the exemption clause which reads "clubs organized and operated exclusively for pleasure, recreation and other nonprofitable purposes." The tax people want a share of the 1933-1934 gates, and will talk about the other years later.

The club, which is closely allied to the U. S. Lawn Tennis Association, retained Lawrence A. Baker, a high-ranking tennis official, as attorney. It is still banging around the courts and may go all the way to the top, the Supreme. And the final decision may have a tremendous effect on amateur sport in the country, because the case-hardened jurists down this way find it difficult to differentiate between an athlete who gets paid off in a dark room and one who goes to the cashier's cage.

Judge Augustus N. Hand, of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, considered the case not long ago, after the U. S. Board of Tax Appeals ruling that the West Side Club had evaded its taxes. The same board ordered the club to pay up, and slapped a 25 per cent penalty on it for failing to file a return within the prescribed time. The circuit court affirmed.

We quote from Judge Hand's opinion:

"The questions raised by this appeal arise because of earnings derived by the taxpayer (West Side Club) from national championship tennis matches . . . pursuant to the desire of the U. S. Lawn Tennis Association to obtain a permanent stadium for the matches, the association and the taxpayer made an agreement in February, 1923, whereby the latter was to erect a stadium, in return for which the association was to award certain matches to the taxpayer for a ten-year period and to receive a certain part of the receipts from sales of tickets for the matches."

The stadium cost a lot more than expected, hit hard times in 1925 and the U. S. L. T. A. agreed to lend the club $6,000 a year for eight years and take a share of the gates. In 1933 it agreed to do this for ten more years.

Judge Hand continued, "The public had no access to the premises except during the playing of matches awarded by the association. . . . The taxpayer owed the association $70,000 at the end of 1934. . . . While the taxpayer was undoubtedly 'organized . . . exclusively for pleasure, etc . . .' it cannot be said that it was so operated. . . .

"In reality the situation is much the same as though the members had gone into the business of selling tickets for athletic events in order to make money and had then used the profits to finance a club in which they were interested. . . . A substantial and profitable business was conducted which had only an indirect relation to the recreational objects of the club.

"It is easy to see why Congress limited the exemption of clubs to those 'organized and operated exclusively for pleasure, etc. . . .' because otherwise it would have been a simple matter to tack a profitable business onto a club that was having difficulty in carrying as large and luxurious a plant as the members might like without the payment of burdensome dues . . . in this case a large business precluded an exemption of the taxpayer as a club 'operated exclusively for pleasure, etc.'"

Biltmore Handwoven Homespun Suits

possessing inimitable color effects, distinctive weaves and remarkable wearing qualities that cannot be produced by machine

The art and importance of hand-weaving is here at its best—reflecting those highly individual characteristics that make homespun famous. All operations in its preparation are by hand instead of machines . . . virgin wool scoured in Ivory suds and pure mountain water . . . sun instead of artificial high-temperature machine drying . . . hand-dyeing by patient methods . . . expressing throughout the worker's pride of craftsmanship.

All the well-known wearing qualities of original homespun are retained, but the present-day cloth is soft and pliable, holding its original color and appearance. Tailored with appropriate care by one of our finest manufacturers, in two and three-button single, and double-breasted models..... $57.50

The virgin wool is scoured in pure soap suds . . . dried by exposing it to sun-rays in pure mountain air rather than high artificial temperatures. Result is a desired softness, plus the original life, strength and wearing qualities of the raw wool.

Then the wool is hand-dyed with the finest dyes . . . in the slow dip-and-exposure method that thoroughly impregnates every fiber, producing apparently natural, rich shades. The woven fabric is cleaned and scoured, then hung on a tentering fence and dried naturally in the sun.

Sun Triad Second As All-Baltimore Combine Triumphs; Big Double Return

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent

Havre de Grace, Md., Sept. 16.—An all-Baltimore combination carried off the chief honors in the Chestertown Purse, featuring the wash day program. Cis Marion, a good-looking daughter of Big Blaze, did the running in the colors of E. K. Bryson, of Baltimore County, with the conditioning of Trainer Joe Serio, jr., of Baltimore, and under the handling of Jockey Mannie Berg, of Baltimore. In addition, Cis Marion carried a lot of Baltimore money, for she was an odds-on favorite at a $3.20 mutuel.

William F. Hitt's Sun Triad was second, beaten a length with Mrs. Sarah Cooper's Miss Brideaux third. Only three other juveniles competed in the sprint over the 6-furlong course. The winner scampered home in the good time of 1:15 3-5 as 8,000 watched.

While the feature race provided a pay-off of only peanut proportions, there was big money for a chosen few betters after the first race and the daily double prices were announced.

Pays $139.90

With only $99 played on him to win, Celtic Knight came from far back in the field to win the first race at a $139.90 mutuel. The Aethelstan II colt had been out of the money in five starts, but was up in time today to win a photo finish. The youngster was purchased out of the Hal Parr disposal sale last year and was running in the interests of L. B. Steele, of Wilmington, Del.

Celtic Knight's victory made the daily double board fairly sag with big possible pay-offs. They ranged from $12,697.20 on Navigation down to $423.20 on Rough Brigade, the favorite in the second race. So little was thought of Balkanese's chances that no doubles were sold ending in that combination. There was only one ticket on Navigation and the holder must have gotten a thrill for the half-miler took command at one stage.

Big Double Completed

The $423.20 pay-off proved the right one when Mrs. J. Y. Christmas' Rough Brigade bounded to a rather easy victory, followed over the line by Blablah with Broiler third. Navigation was fourth ahead of the "no-ticket" Balkanese. The winner paid $4.30 individually.

The A. C. C. Stable's Son Altesse surprised by winning the fifth race, the second best offering on the program. Apprentice J. Boyle gave the Kashar colt a good ride and finished in front of Tony Steel and Conquer. Son Altesse paid $14.90.

RISSA, in the thick of contention throughout, took the lead approaching the stretch, but weakened suddenly near the end. Garfinckel's Sales in Year Mount 6.1%

Volume Is $3,687,263; $1.50 a Share Netted On Common Stock

Julius Garfinckel & Co., Inc., Washington department store, yesterday reported net sales of $3,687,263 in the fiscal year ended July 31, an increase of 6.1 per cent over the previous year's net sales of $3,473,744.

W. E. SCHMID

The report was revealed by President William E. Schmid at the annual stockholders' meeting yesterday at the corporate office in Fairfax, Va.

Net profits after all deductions including provisions for income taxes totaled $240,053, equal to 3.2 times dividend requirements on the preferred stock. After deduction of preferred stock dividends, net was equal to $1.50 a share on common stock.

Comparison with net of previous fiscal year is unavailable inasmuch as the predecessor firm was unincorporated. However, company officials estimated that giving effect to certain changes brought about by incorporation the indicated net income in the fiscal year ended July 31, 1939, would have been approximately $230,000 or the equivalent of $1.42 a share on common stock.

Regular dividends at the rate of 6 per cent a year were paid on the preferred stock on December 31, 1939; March 31 and June 30, 1940; and at the rate of 17½ cents a share quarterly on the common stock on December 15, 1939; March 15 and June 15, 1940. Total dividends paid were $113,175 and $126,877 was added to earned surplus, the company reported.

Current assets at the fiscal year's end were $1,454,492, including $341,123 in cash, compared with current liabilities of $384,909 or a ratio of 3.7 to 1.

Vital Oil Trade Declared Ready For Any Crisis

New York, Sept. 16 (AP).—The United States Army, Navy and Air Corps are assured of plenty of gasoline and oil under any emergency in the opinion of John A. Brown, president of Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., Inc.

In a letter to stockholders today, Brown said: "The oil industry is one vital factor in the defense program about which Americans should not have to worry. . . .

"An industry that has the everyday job of providing 33,000,000 cars, trucks, tractors and buses with lubricants and gasoline should be able to handle all military requirements, even on the basis of wartime activity, without much difficulty."

He added that "possibly some additional plant capacity may be necessary" for the production of 100 octane gasoline for military aviation under "full preparedness."

Policy Sales Dip in Month

New York, Sept. 16 (AP).—New life insurance written in August declined nine-tenths of 1 per cent from the amount written in August, last year, the Association of Life Insurance Presidents reported today.

The total for the month was $579,283,000, against $584,595,000 last year. In the first eight months of 1940 total life insurance written dropped 1.2 per cent to $4,864,065,000 from $4,921,282,000 in the comparable in 1939.

The report covered new paid-for business, exclusive of revivals, increases and dividend additions, of 40 companies having 82 per cent of the total life insurance outstanding in United States legal reserve companies.

Stocks Edge Forward on Short Covering; Light Trade Reflects Waiting on War Turn

New York, Sept. 16.—Short covering aided the stock market today in putting on a small recovery but the gain represented no change of sentiment in the financial district. It is still a waiting affair in security and commodity circles; the waiting being caused by the expectation of a German invasion in England.

This may be the critical week in the European war and while the issue is unsettled, no one in the street has any desire to step with too firm a tread in either direction.

The hesitant frame of mind of the trading fraternity was reflected today in the low volume of dealings. Only 292,810 shares changed hands on the big board and only a handful of the well-known issues closed more than a point away from Saturday's last prices.

The composite average edged up 0.32 point. This was added to a small gain scored in Saturday's short session but prior to that there had been seven consecutive days of decline. A technical rebound was in order and the fact that we are getting one does not change the complexion of the market. The best pace in today's trading came during the first hour. After that the list settled back a trifle and trading was on a restricted scale.

There is nothing discouraging in the fact that traders and investors are sitting on the sidelines in a time like this. For the mere fact that they are waiting to place their money in securities gives promise of a big market once the trend becomes more certain. There is plenty of money waiting to be invested. At the same time there are many stocks of the better grade of companies which are cheap on the bases of earnings and dividends. The possibility that a reversal for England will doubtless make them sell even lower has kept the trading fraternity from going long.

While the short interest doubtless was reduced today, it had been mounting. There were premiums asked in the loan crowd today but brokers reported a good demand for loans of shares. This combination of circumstances has convinced some of the bullish members of the street that when a move comes, it may very well be vicious. While there is a chance for a trader with daring to prepare himself during this period of uncertainty for a big killing, he would have to have plenty of nerve and a firm conviction that the German invasion will not break the British resistance.

Favorable business news on this side of the Atlantic does not appear to be a factor. Obviously it is important to the investor. But the next immediate move will depend upon the war news and not upon our business indices or the political campaign.

Steel operations for this week, as announced today, went to a new high for the year, gaining 1 point to 92.9 per cent of capacity. Ward's issued a favorable review of the automobile situation and, as previously reported, it looks for this week's output to reach 85,000 units. It expects a level of 165,000 units a week through October.

Lower priced shares predominated in today's market. Graham Paige was the most active stock. New York Central led the rails and was up fractionally. General Motors and Chrysler were well supported and Bethlehem and United States Steel gained fractions. Dupont gained 2¼. American Smelting, 1⅛; United Merchants & Manufacturers a point, Westinghouse, 1⅛, and Union Carbide a point.

Bonds had a generally firmer price tone here today in slightly more active dealings. Turnover on the stock exchange was $3,896,000. Prices for United States Treasury issues closed with gains up to 8/32 point on the exchange and unchanged to 2/32 higher in over-counter dealings.

Astralian bonds with gains ranging up to 2 points and strength in some of the Canadian issues were good features in the foreign section. Certain Brazilian issues also advanced in good volume of dealings. Italian and German loans were generally steady.

Gold Supply Of U. S. Climbs To 21 Billion

Gain Approximates 5 Billion in Year; Most From Britain

By the Associated Press

The Treasury's storage vaults bulged yesterday with $21,050,522,982 of gold, which officials calculated was approximately 70 per cent of all the "monetary" gold in the world. A year ago the total was $16,808,268,361.

Since the European war began, gold has been entering the United States at an average rate of about $100,000,000 a week, mostly from the British Empire. Britain has been sending the metal to pay for airplanes and other war supplies.

So persistent has been the flood of gold into New York, that a small army of postal inspectors, Regular Army units and secret service agents recently started moving some of the precious metal to the Treasury's underground vaults at Fort Knox, Ky. They expected to move approximately $5,000,000,000 worth during the summer, but details of the shipments have been kept secret.

The Treasury announced yesterday that revenues for the fiscal year which began July 1 had passed $1,000,000,000, or about one-seventh of the receipts anticipated for the year.

The Federal debt also reached a new high of $43,911,002,279.

Canada Spurs Gold Output

Ottawa, Ontario, Sept. 16 (AP).—In keeping with a general empire policy of stimulating gold production to aid empire credit in foreign countries, Canada is speeding up wartime production of the yellow metal.

Dr. Charles Camsell, deputy minister of mines and resources, is at present touring western Canada, seeking out possibilities for increased Canadian gold production, and many mines are enlarging their mills where possibilities warrant.

Canadian mines are doing "everything consistent with good mining practice" to hurry their output, an official said tonight.

The effort is already evidenced in production figures. Total gold production for the six months ended June 3 was 2,572,042 fine ounces compared with 2,489,969 during the same period of last year.

In terms of potential buying power in foreign countries such as the United States, these six-month production figures represent a total of $99,03,617, compared with $87,551,061 in the first half of 1939.

Week's Bank Loans Show Record Gain

$91,000,000 Increase Is Largest on Record At Federal Reserve

By the Associated Press

The Federal Reserve Board reported yesterday one of the largest weekly increases in commercial, industrial and agricultural loans in years.

In 101 leading cities from which reports were available for the week ended September 11, the increase was $91,000,000. This was the largest increase since this form of statistics was inaugurated in May, 1937. In these cities, it brought business loans to a total of $4,571,000,000, which was $412,000,000 larger than a year ago.

New York City accounted for $51,000,000 of the increase, the Cleveland Federal Reserve district an additional $11,000,000, and the Chicago district $9,000,000. What, if any, connection these loans had to do with the National defense program could not be ascertained.

The Federal Board's 101-City member bank condition statement gave the following summary of assets and liabilities on September 11, together with changes for the week and with the same week last year, in millions of dollars:

War Industries Boom for 2 Years Foreseen by Ayres

Cleveland, Sept. 16 (AP).—Col. Leonard P. Ayres forecast today that defense preparations would stimulate industrial production for the next two years.

War industries at present employ 326,000 and have weekly pay rolls of nearly $12,000,000, he said, adding pay rolls have been increasing distinctly more rapidly than have the number of workers.

The Cleveland Trust Co. vice president and economist in his monthly business summary said part of the reason for industrial production increased only moderately in the summer months "is to be found in the fact that there has been little increase in defense expenditures of the Army and Navy."

London Stocks Remain Firm

London, Sept. 16 (AP).—Exchange Telegraph, British news agency, said today the financial district was cheered by "the amazing success" of the Royal Air Force yesterday in defending the city.

Security prices, as a result, were steadily maintained despite the difficulties and delays to be contended wth because of the bombing attacks. The British war loan was unchanged at £100⅞.

The stock exchange announced it would close regularly at 2 p. m. (8 a. m., E.S.T.), until further notice. Previously the close was 3 p. m. (9 a. m., E.S.T.).

A Story of Confessed Failure: Semi-Skilled But Maladjusted

By Merryle S. Rukeyser
Economic Commentator

Success stories about rugged personalities who surmount obstacles and work their way to the top are perennially interesting, but this is a column about a self-confessed failure.

The personality in question is a single man of 31, unemployed and a high school graduate. He is tall and gaunt, with Lincolnesque features. I picked him up as a hitch hiker the other day while driving from Indianapolis to Rushville to see Wendell L. Willkie.

Mr. Rukeyser

He is a literate and self-conscious fellow and is significant because of what the depression has done to him. In a sense, he is a symbol of many others who are maladjusted.

The stranger, who had been seeking industrial employment, was thumbing his way back to his home in Dayton, Ohio. He was homeward bound for several reasons. In the first place, he had heard that some of the factories in his home city would soon be busy with war orders. Secondly, with the draft imminent, he wanted, if called, to serve with fellow townsmen, rather than strangers.

He speaks classic English, and has a rare sense of detachment in analyzing himself and his prospects. He reported that the plants where he sought employment would in due course need semiskilled men of his type, but found no immediate openings.

This worker is experienced with electric motors and assembly jobs, but he blame shimself for lack of initiative in failing to learn a thoroughly skilled vocation in good times. But when he started to work in the twenties, he was conditioned to prosperity. He never wanted to make more than a mere living, and he erroneously assumed that in good season and bad he could always turn his will to work into currency to provide for his needs.

When his regular work was unobtainable, he sought a living at odd chores, working in used car lots, cutting lawns, and even at assisting a bookkeeper. For a time he went on relief, but most of the time he eked out a living, though he gives the appearance of being undernourished.

He is an epic figure in that he is completely lacking in bitterness. He is inclined to blame his own lack of ambition rather than "the system." He has no leftist tendencies. Politically, he is on the fence, carefully weighing the pros and cons of F. D. R. and Willkie.

Although he works with his hands, his chief interest lies in books—serious books dealing with philosophy and psychology. But thus far books have confused him, rather than strengthened him. In a sense, he has become intoxicated with words and theories. I suggested that for the present he turn from the abtruse and read books which will help to release his own energies. I especially recommended Dorothea Brande's "Wake Up and Live."

My own diagnosis was that he needlessly depreciates his worth when he offers his services to others. He conceded this, but indicated that he was afraid of a "complex." He said that Hitler had permitted an inferiority complex to lead him into his present role. I suggested that a normal man strove for balance, neither underestimating nor overestimating his powers.

It was bizarrre to be discussing philosophy and psychology with a man in this position. Yet his cultural side was a reminder that, with the cessation of immigration, the intellectual and educational background of the rank and file of Americans in overalls has been improving at a spectacular rate in recent years.

Wheat, Cotton Are Buoyant; Corn Weakens

Better Tone Shown By Commodities in Cautious Trade

By the Associated Press

Wheat and cotton were in the van of a cautious forward sortie in major futures markets yesterday.

At Chicago the breadstuff rose ¼ to ½ cent a bushel. Buying was influenced by the upturn in securities and a mildly cheerful interpretation of the war news. Corn, however, dropped ¾ to 1⅛ cents on favorable weather and liberal receipts as harvest time neared.

Cotton advanced 15 to 30 cents a bale at New York. A sharp decrease in stocks available for delivery on futures contracts spurred demand.

Hides started upward again with gains of as much as ¼ cent a pound and copper rose nearly 1/10 cent. Santos coffee swung ahead briskly, followed by rubber, wool tops and cottonseed oil.

Visible Grain Supply

New York, Sept. 16 (AP).—Visible supply of American grain showed the following changes from a week ago (in bushels): Wheat increased 1,111,000; corn increased 435,000; oats increased 253,000; rye decreased 134,000; barley decreased 37,000.

Building Soars To 10-Year Top During Month

$414,941,000 Total In August is Laid To Defense Program

New York, Sept. 16 (AP).—Construction activity in the 37 Eastern States soared to a ten-year high of $414,941,000 in August under the stimulus of the national defense program, F. W. Dodge Corporation reported today.

August residential building contracts awarded totaled $125,98,000, largest since July, 1929, and 20 per cent ahead of August last year.

Public construction contracts increased to $195,93,000 from $158,459,000 in August, 1939. Private construction, however, showed a still larger gain, advancing to $219,648,000 from $153,869,000 a year ago.

Manufacturing building awards of $39,586,000 were nearly four times ahead of August, 1939. Plant expansion stimulated by defense orders accounted for a substantial portion of the improvement.

"The impetus given to construction by the defense program has just begun to be felt," Thomas S. Holden, vice president in charge of statistics and research for the Dodge Corporation, said.

"It should be noted also," Holden added, "that the figures given in this statement do not include a number of large defense projects on the West Coast and in colonial territories, both of which are furnishing an augmented market for materials and labor."

Treasury Inactive In Bond Market

Secretary Morgenthau said yesterday that, for the second straight month the Treasury made no purchases or sales of Government securities for Government investment accounts in July or August.

Weekly Auto Output Expected To Hit 105,000; Now at 85,000

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Sept. 16.—Noting a continued sharp upturn in motorcar production since the start of the new model year, Ward's Automotive Reports, in its current issue, says today that this week's output should reach 85,000 units with a further advance in prospect for next week.

"It would appear at this juncture," says the trade publication, "that volume close to 105,000 units (weekly) will be the equilibrium point at the moment, perhaps somewhere above it. Such a level should hold through October, putting that month's showing, as closely as can be gauged now, somewhere around 475,000 cars and trucks. This would be far above comparative levels of 1939, and in fact, would set an all-time record for the month."

Production of cars and trucks throughout the United States and Canada from January 1 to date, Ward's says, has reached 2,941,632 units. For the same period last year output was 2,447,994.

Commenting on the probable effect of the conscription law upon the sale of motor cars, the trade paper says:

"Finance companies are quietly adapting their policies to inspect more rigidly any applications for automobile installment credit from young men of draft age. Banks also are said to be taking steps in this direction.

"It appears almost certain that any drafting of men for the reserve, or, in crisis, for the Army, will be accompanied by some sort of arrangement for a moratorium on their installment payments. Widespread application of such a program, of course, would develop a critical situation among the finance companies. Hence they are attempting to sidestep the situation now by meticulously checking all applications with this view in mind.

"It goes without saying that general extension of this type of policy is a factor which will work toward reduction of automobile sales in the period ahead."

Boston Jolts Chisox Flag Hopes, 6-2

Chicago Bows 1st Time In 9 Games

Wilson's Five-Hit Pitching Drops Losers 4½ Games Behind As Errors Run Rife

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Sept. 16.—The Boston Red Sox gave the faint pennant hopes of the White Sox a rude jolt today, defeating Chicago, 6 to 2, behind the sterling five-hit pitching of Jack Wilson. Chicago now trails Cleveland by 4½ games.

It was Chicago's first loss in nine starts and their fourth loss in 19 games. The White Sox aided Wilson by an inept exhibition in the field, committing five errors.

Mike Tresh, second man up in the first inning, sent Sox hopes for a ninth straight victory soaring when he tripled off Wilson and scored on an infield out. But after that Wilson was never in serious trouble, yielding the only other run in the sixth on Tresh's single and Julius Solters' double.

Bill Dietrich held the visitors to one hit for three innings, but in the fourth Roger Cramer walked, advanced to second on Ted Williams' single and scored when Luke Appling tossed a double play relay.

The Red Sox went ahead in the throw into the Boston dugout.

fifth, when Wilson singled and went to third on Dom DiMaggio's double. Both scored on Williams' triple to right center field. They added two more in the sixth on two errors and two hits and produced the final run in the seventh with a single, an infield out and Larry Rosenthal's error on Jimmy Foxx's line drive.

Two Former Mat Champions On 'Angel' Card

A couple of former "world's wrestling champions" — Danno O'Mahoney and Ed Don George—will appear in separate bouts on Thursday night's show at Turner's Arena in which The Original Angel, Maurice Tillett, will swap groans with Rudy Dusek, chief of the "Riot Squad."

O'Mahoney, who won the title from Londos back in 1934, will meet Lou The Plummer, while Don George, the reckless New Yorker, will take on Herbie Freeman, Jewish grappler.

Promoter Turner also closed out for a 30-minute bout between Babe Zaharias, brother of Chris and George, and Tom Mahoney, reformed Florida prize fighter.

It has been a long time since Turner had two former champions on the same card. Both O'Mahoney and Don George are favorites here. O'Mahoney is the creator of the Irish Whip.

Promoter Turner stated there would be no advance in prices. The Angel wrestled at the Arena last winter, and more than 900 people were turned away.

Arlington Aces Win District Softball Title

The Arlington Aces captured the District of Columbia women's softball championship last night at Ballston stadium by taking their second straight victory over the Bureau of Engraving girls.

Behind the four-hit pitching of Lelia George, the Aces marched to a 7-4 victory to clinch the three-game series for the title. They previously had defeated the Engravers, 16-8.

Miss George struck out 11 Bureau hitters and hit twice out of three times at bat. The Bureau's Pitcher Wannack gave up nine hits and came through with a homerun in the first inning with a teammate on base. The Aces went out in front with a three-run spree in the sixth inning.

Packard Defeats Studebaker, 6 to 4

Packard-Washington defeated the Studebaker Champions, 6-4, in a Motor City League. Bradley went the route for the winners, allowed 12 hits, but never permitted the game to get out of hand. Tom Fowler was batting hero for Packard-Washington, batting in three runs. Kidd, with four hits, starred for the losers.

Phils Defeat Cards, 3-2, but Lose 2d, 7 to 1

Philadelphia Wins 46th Game, Most in Any Season Since 1937

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Sept. 16.—The lowly Phillies won their forty-sixth victory of the season, more than in any year since 1937, by beating the St. Louis Cardinals, 3 to 2, today in the first game of a double-header. They lost the second, however, 7 to 1.

Si Johnson stopped his former St. Louis clubmates with five hits in the opener, and a double by Joe Marty off Mort Cooper in the ninth led to the winning run. Cooper yielded only two more hits than his mound rival.

Danny Litwhiler, the Phils' right-fielder, ran his consecutive hitting stretch to 21 games, getting a single in both contests.

In the second game, Ira Hutchinson, of the Cards, held the home team to six hits while the Red Birds capitalized on three Philly errors, seven walks and eight hits for their seven-run total.

Man of the Month

The Man of the Month contest is sponsored jointly by The Washington Post and Station WJSV. Following each of the Nats' games, Arch McDonald will award points to Washington players as he deems performances merit. The Man of the Month will be presented with a $50 merchandise order by The Post.

By Arch McDonald

Station WJSV Baseball Broadcaster

The Nats slowed up production of Man of the Month points yesterday with their 9-2 debacle at Detroit but at least three players merit mention.

To Buddy Lewis, five points, because he made two of the Nats' five hits including a double, and scored one of their two runs.

To Jimmy Bloodworth, four points, because he hit the ball hard all day and because his seventh-inning double figured in both Washington runs.

To Jack Sanford, two points, because he drove in a run with a hit and played a clever game at first base. The total:

Dutch Leonard	37	Joe Krakauskas	18
Buddy Lewis	36	Jimmy Pofahl	16
Jimmy Bloodworth	33	Cecil Travis	14
George Case	29	Rick Ferrell	12
Jack Sanford	29	Walter Masterson	5

Three Pirate Homers Beat Giants by 7-6

DiMaggio, Van Robays And Young Connect To Score All 7 Runs

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 16.—Scoring all their runs on homers, the Pittsburgh Pirates wobbled to a 7-to-6 victory over the New York Giants today in their final meeting of the season.

The Pirates rushed into the lead with a three-run circuit blow by Vince DiMaggio in the second inning and another of the same by Maurice Van Robays in the third. When they scored what proved to be the deciding marker, a home run by Pep Young in the fifth, the only tallies that Max Butcher had yielded the Giants were two homers by Mel Ott, bringing his total to 19 for the year.

In the sixth Butcher walked two and gave doubles to Harry Danning and Tonny Cuccinello for three runs and the Giants got another run in the seventh off Mace Brown, but were stopped finally by Bob Klinger. It was their eighth straight loss.

Wanted — A Chance

A civil service employee who recently came from a western state to Washington to work and get an education on a part-time basis needs a loan.

For security I can offer only one thing—A reputation for honesty and integrity. Somewhere, here, the chance I seek exists.

Any party interested in a business arrangement of this type please communicate with Box 776, The Washington Post, in order to arrange an interview at your convenience.

DO I GET THE CHANCE?

Thomas Mann, the world-famed German author, now in exile from his native land, gives his views to WJSV and other Columbia network listeners tonight at 9:15 on why he believes alien registration is so important to the United States.

A Nobel Prize winner, Dr. Mann's works are regarded as classics throughout the entire civilized world. Although he himself was not subject to the Nazi racial laws, he fled from Germany early in the Hitler regime and has been lecturing and teaching in this country since, as well as continuing his writings. His most recent work, "The Beloved Returns," was published only a few weeks ago.

Dr. Mann is to be interviewed for his nationwide audience by William A. Carmichael, Federal Supervisor of Immigration and Naturalization for Southern California. The broadcast comes from Columbia's Los Angeles studios.

Dr. Mann is to be accompanied by Peter Kirsch, an alien to whom Dr. Man will explain, as well as to the listening audience, how the check-up of foreign-born residents of the United States serves as a safeguard against treacherous activities and works hardships on none but wrongdoers.

The Post Radio Time Table

11:15 a. m., WOL—Constitution Day in Cleveland: Attorney-General Robert H. Jackson is presented by the Department of Justice and the American Bar Association.

1:00 p. m., WMAL—Mrs. Henry W. Robert, jr., national president of the Daughters of the American Revolution, talks over the Streamlined Journal in observance of Constitution Day.

5:15, WRC—Here, you golfers, are the finals of the Kenwood Club's tournament.

5:45, WOL—In the Carlton's new Cosmos Room Ben Young and his orchestra play at the popular cocktail hour.

7:30, WMAL—Otto Tolischus, whose dispatches from abroad won him this year's Pulitzer Prize for distinguished foreign correspondence, joins the smarties on Information Please.

7:30, WJSV—"Reno-vated," the First Nighter's play, tells of a Hollywood couple whose servants' plans for divorce start Those Rumors.

8, WJSV—Dizzy Dean is enjoying the glories of baseball's comeback trail. Paula Richards was one girl who sought gold in Tibet and got a cell in Hongkong. These are but two of We, the People.

8, WMAL—Nino Martini of the Metropolitan Opera, and Dinah Shore, of the Chamber Music Society of Lower Basin Street, two very different organizations, join forces for Musical Americana.

8, WOL—Assistant Secretary of War Robert P. Patterson speaks in a Constitution Day program in Rochester, N. Y.

68 Persons Accused In Suit Growing Out Of D. C. Man's Plaint

The Justice Department, in a legal action that had roots in the office of a District optometrist, yesterday charged 29 United States corporations and 68 individuals with engaging in "a conspiracy to fix unreasonably high and noncompetitive prices" for spectacles and optical supplies throughout the Nation.

Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold, the Goverment's "trust buster," filed four suits for violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act in the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

He proudly displayed yesterday a copy of Arnold's latest book on trust busting, "The Bottlenecks of Business," inscribed by Arnold: "To DDavid S. Block—a good ally in a David S. Block, a good ally in a

Boycott Threatened

The book contains reproductions of newspaper advertisements published locally by Block which drew attention to his prices as being substantially below the usual prices for spectacles of similar quality.

According to Arnold's book, Block was admonished by optical goods wholesalers to stop cutting prices, on pain of being denied merchandise. Block told The Post yesterday that after he refused to cut prices he found it difficult to obtain some types of optical supplies, particularly bifocal lenses.

The suits filed yesterday were Nation-wide in scope, affecting the approximately 28,000,000 people in this country who wear glasses and spend $40,000,000 a year on them.

The first of the four suits charges a general combination and conspiracy to fix prices on practically all of the spectacles sold in the United States.

Huge Trust Charged

The accompanying complaint alleges that American Optical Co. and Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., the two largest manufacturers and wholesalers of optical goods, are able to dominate the entire industry because they control 60 per cent of the manufacturing business and 70 per cent of the wholesale business.

The complaint recites that under the leadership of those two large corporations, the defendants have "acted in concert" to maintain the manufacturers' price, the wholesale price and the retail price of optical goods at "unreasonably high levels."

In addition, the complaint charges that the defendants have blacklisted and boycotted individual retailers and wholesalers who refused to participate in the "price-fixing conspiracy."

In this connection, Block said yesterday that he has been warned about his price policy by large wholesalers and manufacturers, chiefly, he believes, because his prices are about half the national average.

Firm Recently Fined

The three other suits charge separate price-fixing conspiracies in further detail.

On May 27 Bausch & Lomb Optical Co. and three of its officers were fined $40,000 after pleading no defense to an indictment charging violation of the antitrust law. The suit ended an alleged German-controlled monopoly in the manufacture and sale of precision defense instruments. The Justice Department said that yesterday's suits were not related to the proceedings in May, except that they formed a part of a general Justice Department investigation into "misuse of the patent privilege to restrain trade in violation of the antitrust laws."

Forum Warned Of Military 'Anti-Christ'

Emphasis on Religion Marks Bicentennial Opening at U. of Pa.

By Howard W. Blakeslee,
Associated Press Science Editor.

Philadelphia, Sept. 16—Discussions of religious topics were mingled today with reports on scientific developments as the University of Pennsylvania opened its bicentennial program, and an early speaker warned against what he called a "military anti-Christ."

The speaker was Dr. Jacques Maritain, of the Catholic Institute of Paris and the Institute of Mediaval studies, Toronto, Canada.

He did not identify the "anti-Christ," but said:

"The very idea of a Christian state appears today as something very remote. The new forms of state confronting Europe are totalitarian types, claiming for themselves the Messianic love due only to God; having only one aim—to annihilate religion in the world . . .

"Recently on going through a commentary on the Apocalypse I read that, according to the well-known scholar, Don Calmet, the anti-Christ, 'having assembled an immense army, will overthrow all the kingdoms of the world under the pretext of liberating peoples from tyranny and reestablishing religion.'"

The emphasis on religion in this bicentennial is a new step in the attitude of great American colleges. Of the 3,500 visiting university and college faculty members who signed up for the symposium this week, religion is in the top half in promised attendance.

All today's religious talks stressed the welfare of individual man. Dr. Rufus Jones, of Haverford College, said:

"The church must face the real issues of life and make a practical difference in the lives of actual men, women and children, or it is doomed to become a disappearing affair."

Rites Tomorrow For Miss Crowley

Funeral services for Miss Elizabeth Crowley, 70, of 1225 Fifteenth street northwest, a resident of Washington for more than 50 years, will be at 9 a. m. tomorrow at St. Matthew's Church. She died at her home Sunday after a short illness.

A native of County Cork, Ireland, Miss Crowley was a member of St. Matthew's and active in sodality work. She is survived by her sister, Miss Margaret Crowley, of the same address. Burial will be in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

One of Brigham Young's 3,000 Descendants Here to Work

Miss Booth, 20, To Be a Typist In Veterans' Agency

Brigham Young started something!

It's a line of cuties, if his estimated 3,000 or 4,000 immediate descendants look like 20-year-old Virginia Booth, who came here yesterday to pound a typewriter for the United States Veterans Administration.

Miss Booth, of Provo, Utah, is Brigham Young's great granddaughter and she came here alone, doesn't know a person in Washington, but is likely as not to meet some unknown first or second cousin.

27 Wives, 56 Children

It's a simple matter of mathematics and the record. Young had 27 wives and 56 children and, as Miss Booth said, his descendants are many and scattered.

Miss Booth traces her connection to the great religious leader through Harriet Cook, whom she believes to have been among the first five wives Young took to himself. She likes many of the characteristics which gave her great-grandfather an international name, principally his abilities of leadership and his great organizing power.

She saw Dean Jagger play the role of Brigham Young in a new movie and liked the show. But somehow Dean wasn't entirely Brigham, as family lore handed her great-grandfather down to Miss Booth.

To her Brigham Young was "stronger."

For one thing, she recalled, Young saw "his duty" in 27 wives and had the organizing facilities and the personal capabilities for maintaining order in his household, where at least a few of his wives were "dominant" of nature.

Miss Booth thought a moment about it. She couldn't say how her great-grandfather managed it. The art, it was implied, is lost.

Counties Shunt Needy Family For Months, Denying Relief

Three Fight in Courts To Fix Responsibliity For Aiding the Hulms

By the Associated Press

Lincoln, Nebr., Sept. 16.—Before a silent and tense audience, the Roy A. Hulms, called in the Congressional Migration Committee witness book, "The Family Without a County," today related how they were shunted for months between South and North Dakota while three counties fought in the courts to determine responsibility for their keep.

As Mr. and Mrs. Hulm closed their story, Representative Tolan (Democrat), of California, head of the special House committee investigating interstate migration, started to remark, "we hope we can recommend some legislation—," but Mrs. Hulm interrupted to say "I certainly hope so!"

She had told how the family, after losing everything in the depression, went on relief in South Dakota, later going to North Dakota seeking a job that didn't materialize. For a year Perkins County, S. Dak., sent relief checks to the family, finally stopping them on grounds a year's absence from the State had culminated the Hulms' official residence in South Dakota.

Burleigh County, N. Dak., responded by sending the family back to South Dakota. Perkins County immediately transported the Hulms back to Burleigh County, which in turn moved them back again to South Dakota. Finally they arrived in Adams County, N. Dak., which sued Burleigh County for their keep and won. Burleigh County then sued Perkins County, the case now being before the District court. Meanwhile, Burleigh County is giving them relief.

Mrs. Hulm's story led Tolan to remark in its midst that "you've certainly been kicked back and forth."

After the hearing, Tolan proposed a national relief status for migrants.

"These people are being kicked around. They are Americans, our people, and they want to stay home. We've got to fix some national status for those that must move," he said during the questioning of C. H. Willson, FSA administrator at Denver.

Willson replied "we must fix it so that existing agencies can start what migration is necessary and direct it to proper spots.

"These families could be cared for if we had the funds and the authority for additional water resource development and for purchase of land to be divided and resold under a sound program."

During the testimony of Mrs. Harold Hendricks, of Lincoln, who, after relating how she and her husband had shuttled for several years between Oregon and Nebraska, was asked by Tolan:

"How did you come to pass up California?"

"We knew some people there and understood they couldn't get money enough to get back to Nebraska," she answered.

ChicagoMilk Industry Enjoined In Antitrust Case Dismissal

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Sept. 16.—The Government's antitrust case against 45 individuals, corporations and associations in the milk industry was dismissed today.

The charges against them were dropped when a consent decree was entered enjoining them from fixing prices, controlling supplies and suppressing competition in the huge Chicago market.

The case, one of the largest in the Justice Deartment's campaign against alleged monopolies, ended after Special Assistant Attorney General Leo F. Tierney informed Judge Charles E. Woodward that the consent- decree had been arranged. The jurist then entered the decree and, on Tierney's motion, dismissed charges of conspiracy to violate the antitrust law against all the defendants.

Tierney said that the action served the "best interest of all concerned" and precluded the expense of a trial.

Among the 45 persons and organizations covered by the consent decree were the Borden Co.; the Bowman Dairy Co; the Associated Milk Dealers, Inc., a unit made up of the city's major retailers; the Pure Milk Association, cooperative embracing 12,000 dairy farmers in Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana, and the Milk Wagon Drivers Union, Local 753, of Chicago.

Also freed, although not parties to the decree, were Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, head of the Chicago Board of Health; Capt. Daniel Gilbert, chief investigator for the State's attorney's office here, and Leslie Goudie, chief of the Teamsters Joint Council of Chicago.

All individual and corporate defendants—totaling 53 and including the 45 named in the consent decree and eight who were not covered by the decree—were freed.
